THE MASSES OF FRANZ SCHUBERT.*

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

A FULL and accurate life of Schubert has yet to be written, and until it appears we must satisfy ourselves with the ill-digested work of Dr. Kreissle von Hellborn, according to which the master wrote six masses—the five named below, and another (No. 5, in A flat), still unpublished. The catalogue of Schubert's compositions mentions also a "Deutsche Messe," written in 1827; this, however, is no more a mass, strictly speaking, than the "German Requiem" of Brahms is a Requiem, and, it follows, that we have before us, with a single exception, all that Schubert wrote for the most important solemnity of his Church. Every amateur will be glad to see these works brought within easy reach, because, thanks to the justice of Time, Schubert now occupies a position able to command attention for everything bearing his name. His compositions may not be—they are not—of equal merit, and some of them may add little or nothing to his fame, but they increase our knowledge of the man and his genius, even when they fail to enrich the treasures of art. Those amateurs, however, who are already familiar with Schubert's Masses have a special and well-defined reason for hailing their publication in the present form. With regard to the five volumes before us, it is not so much a question of a further revelation of Schubert, though that assumes importance, as of increasing the store of classical and, at the same time, popular music. The Masses differ in point of value not less than of character, but, taking them altogether, they are, as religious music, refined and noble, as music per se, healthy and strong. Every effort to spread such works broadcast among the people deserves encouragement, now that well-meaning but misdirected enthusiasm is doing its utmost to establish false canons of taste. One propaganda must be met by another; and a point is scored on the right side when good music becomes accessible to all.

In estimating the works before us, regard should be had to the time and circumstances of their production. In point of date they range from 1814, when Schubert was seventeen years old, to 1828, within five months of his death; covering, therefore, nearly all the active period of the master's too-short life. They may, of course, be presumed to reflect his artistic growth from the unformed, though precocious genius of the boy to the fully-developed, intellectual, and imaginative power of the man; and this they do to a certain extent, but in a fashion which places us, at the outset, face to face with a difficulty. When Schubert wrote his first Mass in 1814, though Beethoven's lovely No. 1 had been seven years published, the prevailing taste in ecclesiastical music was that which Haydn and Mozart so largely illustrated. It is unnecessary to describe the Church compositions of those masters, or to point out the extent to which they sought musical effect, independent of just expression. The genius of the writers has perpetuated the favour of works which, on the ground of fitness for their intended purpose, have but an inadequate claim, and to know them intimately is a duty incumbent upon every amateur. Looking at the fashion of which the Haydn-Mozart Mass is an example, and the influence of great names upon an ambitious lad, we are entitled to look for the same style in Schubert's early works. It is a remarkable fact, however, that the Mass in F (No. 1) shows no trace at all of the Haydn-Mozart influence, which, nevertheless, largely characterises those in B flat and C, composed respectively, according to Von Hellborn, one and two years later. The first Mass, in point of fact, though full of Schubert's most fascinating individuality, seems to have been inspired by Beethoven's Mass in C, which it emulates in the mingled fervour and chasteness of its religious style, as well as in the beauty and grandeur of its effects. For this reason, and others based upon points of detail, we are entitled to ask whether Schubert's biographers have not made a mistake in numbering the works before us—whether the so-called first Mass did not really follow those in G, B flat, and C, and approach near in point of time to the one in E flat, which may emphatically be called its sister. Kreissle von Hellborn, it is true, enters confidently into particulars about the production of the first Mass, telling us that it was written for the centenary festival of the parish church of Lichtenthal, that Schubert conducted the performance in person, with Mayseder as first violin, and that, at its close Salieri embraced the composer saying, "Franz, you are my pupil, and will do me great honour." Moreover, we are told that the MS. now in the hands of Dr. Schneider, bears date 1814. Due weight should be given to such powerful evidence, but it deserves notice as illustrating the confusion and uncertainty connected with a life which nobody at the time thought would need an historiographer, that a second performance described by Ferdinand Schubert could never be recollected by the lady—Therese Grob—who is said to have taken the principal part in it. We are bound, perhaps, to accept the story of the Mass in F as told by Von Hellborn, but internal evidence points so clearly in another direction that we confess ourselves perplexed. Strange indeed was it, and altogether at variance with the rules that governed Schubert's career, for him to begin in the noble and dignified religious school of Beethoven, passing over to that of Haydn and Mozart; and ending where he commenced. If he did this, we have before us a most eccentric freak of genius, wholly inexplicable by any theory of causation that mind can conceive.

Taking the five Masses without reference to numerical order—as should be done whenever they are subjected to comparative criticism—they arrange themselves in two groups, made up respectively of Nos. 2, 3, and 4, and Nos. 1 and 6. We must not be supposed to suggest by this division that the members of the first group show a family likeness equal in degree to that which undoubtedly exists between those of the second. The arrangement, however, is not wholly arbitrary, because, though the Mass in G (No. 2) is a better work, and more distinctive of the master, than its companions, all three are nearly allied in dimensions and in character, while they are not far from equal in their value relative to those in F and E flat. According to the authority so often named above, these Masses followed each other very closely, the "G" and "B flat" bearing date 1815, the "C" 1816. They may be accepted, therefore, as the outcome of one phase, and no more, in the composer's career; and as they were produced under like conditions in each case, they undoubtedly reflect the influences then governing Schubert's mind. Again, curiously enough, the earliest work is the most independent, the second and third being, by comparison, no better than imitations. A good deal of nonsense has been written about the Mass in G, and in particular does poor Kreissle von Hellborn stumble over it to his extreme damage. Thus, he styles the work "the noblest of Schubert's known Masses," a statement which, in view of Nos. 1 and 6, is simply absurd. But the unfortunate Doctor goes on to demonstrate that he has very little acquaintance indeed with his subject—speaking of a "joyful 'Dona nobis,'" which, as a separate movement, does not exist, and of a "concluding Kyrie" nobody else has yet been able to discover. The truth is, that the Mass in G can only rank foremost in the second class of Schubert's important works. Written for a small orchestra—two trumpets, drums, and organ, in addition to a string quartett—and numbering altogether but 508 bars, its pretensions by no means justify Von Hellborn's enthusiasm. Both the ideas in the work and their treatment are, however, often striking and beautiful. The simplicity and devotional expression of the "Kyrie," with its lovely reprise of the first theme, the solemn character of the "Credo," with its unending orchestral counterpoint of crotchets, the beautiful "Benedictus," a canon for soprano, tenor, and bass, and impressive "Agnus Dei," are features of rare interest and attraction.

It is only when we compare the work with the confessedly noblest examples of the master, that we see its inferiority. This, however, should not blind us to the fact that, considering Schubert's age when it was written, and the influences amid which he worked, the Mass in G is a surprising effort—evidencing not only its composer's genius, but also his fine sense of the true and just in art. It is said to have been penned in five days; and this, perhaps, accounts for many slips which would not otherwise have happened, though the fact lies beyond question that Schubert was a careless workman. Even the words of his Masses, which he must have known by heart, are incorrectly transcribed, and the editor of the present edition has had to make important changes, in order to fit the Masses for use in the Catholic Church.

The Mass (No. 3) in B flat was, as already stated, composed immediately after that in G, from which, however, it differs in several important respects. Von Hellborn states that this work is heard in Vienna much more often than its companions, for the reason, perhaps, that the popular style of Haydn and Mozart is almost ostentatiously adopted. Schubert's individuality asserts itself here and there, but the influence of the older masters predominates, and, as a result, we have a good deal of showy and effective, if not very appropriate, music. Indeed, regarding the Mass as an example of the school to which it belongs, we quite agree with a thoughtful critic, who has said that "it is not unworthy to rank with the best of Haydn's and Mozart's works of the same kind." It contains many passages of a purely conventional type—mere "padding," in point of fact; but it also contains much beautiful melody, and, in the case of the "Benedictus," as fine an example of part-writing as any to be found in the range of sacred art. Schubert was always happy in setting the "Benedictus," but, in this instance, the source of his inspiration was obviously the enchanting movement which, whether by Mozart or Süssmayer, gives so much of loveliness to the "Requiem." The "Agnus Dei" may also be referred to in terms of praise. On the other hand, the "Cum Sancto Spiritu," wherein Schubert ventures upon fugal, or rather imitative, writing, is poor in the extreme, and would, if presented as an exercise in an academy class, entail a "wiggling" upon its unfortunate perpetrator. In his "Dona nobis," moreover, Schubert follows out "to the bitter end" the bad practice of setting solemn and tranquil words to light and vivacious music for the sake of an effective wind-up. Balancing merits and shortcomings the Mass in B flat must be set down as a clever and pleasing example of its particular school, while it has the further advantage of easiness, and a popular character. The work is scored for oboes, bassoons, trumpets, drums, and organ, in addition to the string quartett, and numbers 607 bars.

With the Mass (No. 4) in C before us, and, also, the date (1816) put to it by Schubert's biographer, we are more than ever disposed to give up chronology as a hopeless puzzle. How came it that in two short years our author descended from the height of the beautiful Mass in F to the comparatively low level where we now find him. For, if the No. 3 was an ostentatious copy of the Haydn-Mozart style, that before us may be called a slavish imitation, redeemed only in a slight degree by strokes of genius. Circumstances attendant upon the creation of the work would, perhaps, if we knew them, give us some clue to the reason for so marked a retrogression; but, in their absence, we can only wonder at the fact. After what has been said, a good deal of this Mass may pass without further comment, inasmuch as amateurs cannot go far wrong in calling upon their knowledge of the model for an idea of the copy. They will readily suppose that the work abounds in bold and brilliant passages, that the orchestra is used in a showy manner, and that musical effect is sought without much reference to the purport of the words. Examples of all this may be found in the "Gloria," the "Credo," and the "Dona nobis;" but, on the other hand, there are not wanting passages that give us a momentary glimpse, so to speak, of the composer's genius and individuality. Those readers who know the Mass will at once recur to the "Et incarnatus," an Adagio only twenty-one bars long, yet containing beauty enough for one of greater dimensions. Other portions might be cited, but no amount of detail, with regard to such distinctiveness, as exists in the work, could alter the fact, that it is to all intents and purposes, a reflection of other thoughts and other fashions than those natural to the composer. This, however, Schubert himself would hardly have conceded, even towards the close of his life. He had some pride in his 4th Mass, and took the trouble to write a new choral "Benedictus" for it, instead of the original soprano solo, this task, indeed, being one of the latest he accomplished. The edition before us does not contain the second movement, and we think the editor has used a wise discretion in excluding it, if only because great beauty and originality of character put it out of keeping with the rest.

Schubert seems to have written the Mass in C for an orchestra without violas, those instruments not appearing in the score; provision is made, however, for two oboes (or clarionets!), trumpets, drums, and organ. The entire work numbers 549 bars; 41 bars more than the shortest of the five Masses—that in G.

We now come to the second group, going backward in point of time, but forward in all other respects, to reach the Mass (No. 1), in F, some particulars concerning which have already been given. Here we get out of a confined place into one large and open, and see our composer in all his native vigour and beauty, no longer under any influences save those of his own genius, and giving full play to his imagination and skill. Here too, for the first time, we see him with something like a full orchestra at command. In the smaller Masses he makes admirable use of limited means; but now, with larger resources, he comes before us as the veritable Schubert whom every amateur loves with special fervour as a writer for the orchestra. Accepting Von Hellborn's account as to the origin of this Mass, it would appear that extra instruments were engaged for the Festival at Lichtenthal, and hence we now find Schubert dealing with oboes, clarionets, bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones, and drums, besides the usual strings. What wonder that he felt inspired to employ these resources in the best possible manner, and after his own fashion; conscious that the opportunity had come to reveal the gifts with which Heaven had endowed him. Well did the young master set out by writing a beautiful "Kyrie," wherein dwells the spirit of pure and heartfelt devotion. Putting aside the temptation to orchestral pomp and splendour, Schubert composed music which is itself a prayer, with its plaintive, yearning melodies, and solemn, unaffected harmonies. A soprano solo gives variety and added beauty to the movement, the chorus being in one instance happily used as an accompaniment, while the orchestra lends its most tender and delicate colouring to the whole. We find too, more than one of the touches peculiar to Schubert, that give his later works so great a piquancy. The return of the first theme is beautifully managed, and a new flowing accompaniment for strings bestows a fresh charm upon its repetition. Our composer seems to have thrown himself heart and soul into the "Gloria," breaking loose especially from all restraint as to space, and writing no fewer than five movements, some of them amply developed. The opening Allegro is bold and spirited, without being characteristic in more than the use of the orchestra; and the "Gratias agimus" (Andante con moto) recalls, without being like, the "Recordare Jesu" (same time and key) of Mozart's "Requiem." An effective change of rhythm and character marks the passage, "Domine Deus, Rex Celestis," and leads to an Adagio, "Domine Deus, Agnus Dei," which is in Schubert's most characteristic and beautiful style. The "Quoniam" briefly preludes a largely developed fugue (Allegro vivace) "Cum Sancto Spiritu," the working of which is attended nearly throughout by a brisk violin accompaniment. For a lad of seventeen this scholastic exercise may be called clever, but Schubert appears much at ease when he safely reaches his pedal point, and launches out into a Coda containing some bold and striking progressions. The "Credo" is set in a single movement, Andantino, 227 bars long, and affects, throughout, a subdued character, clarionets, trumpets, and drums being silent. It is, however, one of the best numbers in the work, not only on the score of beauty but of invention, one example of which quality may be seen in a figure of accompaniment for wind instruments, so inexorable throughout as to suggest the very steadfastness of belief. We might dwell long upon every page of this "Credo," but it must suffice to indicate the striking impressiveness of the "Crucifixus" (in which alone the figure just referred to is suspended), and of the bass solo set to "Et iterum venturus est," &c. Taken as a whole, the movement deserves a place among the finest settings of the Creed. The "Sanctus" opens well with fortissimo diatonic chords for the voices, preluded by tremolo passages for orchestra, the crescendo of which leads up to them with splendid effect. Though the rest of this Adagio maestoso is scarcely worthy of the beginning, it is not without merit, nor unfit for its place in the Mass. The "Benedictus" (Andante con moto) will always be the favourite movement. It is written as a canon on the unison and octave for two sopranos and two tenors, the second tenor leading, followed in order by the voices above, and it has a melody which, if not original beyond common, is expressive in a high degree. With the entry of each voice the orchestra has a different manner of accompaniment, but nothing interferes with the strict form of the movement in the vocal parts. Passing over the "Agnus Dei" we have only to remark of the "Dona nobis" that it is based upon the theme of the "Kyrie," which dictates its entire character and treatment. Thus, as the Mass began so it ends,—the same subdued and plaintive strains which lifted heavenwards the prayer for mercy, doing a like office for the aspiration after peace. Reviewing the entire work, and taking special note of its orchestration, we must once more express surprise that such evidence of ripeness should be given in a first composition of the kind. The Mass in F contains altogether 940 bars, and is, therefore, by comparison with those of the first group, a large work.

Finis coronat opus. We come now to the splendid composition, important in dimensions as in character, with which Schubert closed his labours for the Church. The circumstances attending the production of the grand Mass in E flat, like most else connected with this master's life, are still obscure, the only known reference to them being met with in a letter from one of Schubert's friends to another, dated July 1828, the last year of his life. "He (Schubert) is still here at present," wrote Herr Jenger "working zealously at a new Mass." This and no more, has come down to us concerning one of the finest examples of sacred art that genius has produced. Composed only a few months before his death, and it may have been, with some presentiment of what was approaching, the Mass embodies Schubert's ripest thoughts, and deepest feelings. We cannot hear it without a consciousness that it came from the heart as well as from the head of the master, who on no previous occasion touched so powerfully the springs of human emotion. Like its predecessor last noticed, the Mass in E flat, is written for a full orchestra; but in dimensions it far exceeds the "F major," containing no fewer than 1687 bars, of which the opening movement has 164. In this "Kyrie" the genius of Schubert is revealed to the full extent of its capacity for expressing deep and tender feeling. How beautifully the work opens for example, with soft sustained wind chords, emphasised by the marked rhythm of the basses, pizz. And then, the loveliness of the first vocal phrase, which might well give utterance to all the yearnings of the soul for pardon, how it strikes at once the keynote that governs the entire Mass, and shows us all the power of art chastened and ennobled by religious emotion. But the musician, as well as the musicosentimentalist can revel in this delicious "Kyrie," and did space permit, nothing would be easier than to prove that its beauties are transcendent. The "Gloria" is quite worthy to follow the opening movement, and presents many a trait of Schubert's most charming individuality. Among these are the change on the words "Adoramus te," the treatment of the "Domine Deus" and "Miserere nobis," and especially the magnificent passage with which this part of the "Gloria" ends. "Cum Sancto Spiritu" is set as a fugue, after a much more elaborate fashion than we find in the Mass No. 1. Its character, however, apart from the contrapuntal skill shown, is affected by a large use of chromatic progressions, and the general result strikes us as more scholastic than pleasing. The "Credo" gives a foretaste of its novelty by the two-bar roll of drums which preludes the entrance of the voices. Beethoven had shown how the tympani should be used, and Schubert here almost betters his instructions, so impressive is the effect. The drum passage more than once reappears, and is an important feature in a movement full of interest. In the "Et incarnatus," our composer resorts to his much-loved canonic form, with a success rarely, if ever, surpassed. The Canon, written for one soprano and two tenor voices, has a melody of extreme beauty; the parts flow with smoothness, and the accompaniment enriches without encumbering. This is undoubtedly the gem of the "Credo," though many subsequent passages call for hearty admiration, both on æsthetic and scientific grounds. The "Sanctus," peculiarly enterprising in its progressions, cannot compete with the "Et incarnatus" for charm, but the "Benedictus" for quartett and chorus, might run that lovely movement very hard for first place. Mere verbal description avails nothing to convey an idea of its character; we may, however, arouse curiosity by speaking of it in the strongest terms as a model of religious music. The solemn "Agnus" and marvellously beautiful "Dona nobis" are worthy of all that has gone before, and, in closing the volume in obedience to the exigencies of space, we can only express a hope that very soon this grand Mass will have the place in public esteem it fairly deserves.

A word must suffice to recognise the general accuracy and completeness of the edition before us, and to state that all the Masses have been ably adapted to the Communion Service of the English Church by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, M.A., and are published in a separate form.

THE ORIGIN OF THE ANGLICAN CHANT.

By J. POWELL METCALFE.

A FEW months ago appeared in the Musical Times a paper on "The Musical Remains of the Ancient Church of England." It was there shown that the people's custom of response in uninflected speech—still to be traced in the services of churches in Yorkshire and Lancashire, where the ancient use has not been displaced by more modern fashion—could have had origin nowhere but in the primitive British Church. To the same source, it was shown, alone could be traced those quaint, old common measure tunes, called, apparently as soon as (if not much sooner than) they were gathered out of the people's memories, to aid in the great work of the Reformation, "the Church tunes." As it is proposed in this paper to point out the mode in which this old form was adapted for our Church service, though the unaltered form could never say more for itself than "allowed to be sung in churches," it may be as well, briefly, to recapitulate our reasons for assigning such venerable antiquity to the "Church tune."

About the same time, in France, Germany, and England, were earnest workers in the Reformation movement, busy in setting the Psalms of David in the people's verse. Clement Marôt, Court Poet to Francis the First, assisted by Beza, the Parisian Professor of Hebrew, was the author of the French rhymed version. The earlier of Marôt's versifica-tions were written in the metre of the loose love ditties of the Court, with the intention that they should be sung to the same tunes, in the hope of weaning the singers to purer and higher thoughts through the strains of a favourite melody. This union of sacred and profane seeming to Calvin unbecoming, he put forth the great choralist, Goudimel, to compose tunes to other of Marôt's rhymed translations, a work—this composing of his fine tunes—that brought on Goudimel's head the fury of the Papists on Black Bartholomew's day; they murdered him, and cast his poor body into the Seine. Luther himself took charge of the tunes of the German metrical sacred music—writing some, adapting others from the Latin service, and fitting the national tunes to the use of the new movement. No such clear history can be given of our own old tunes. It was in 1562 that "the whole Book of Psalms," our old version, first made its appearance. It contained, with the words, "apt notes to sing them withal." Forthwith we find these old tunes called specially "The Church Tunes," a title craving passing notice. Though, singularly enough, we find it claimed for them on title pages, "allowed to be sung in churches," the claim goes no farther than "allowed." And in our Prayer Book itself, with the exception of the translations of the "Veni Creator," all metrical hymns and metrical psalms are utterly ignored. The word "Church," moreover, has certainly nothing to do with the exotic Church of Rome, for nothing at all equivalent to the "common measure" appears in the Latin hymn metres. The old tunes could not possibly have been used to Latin hymns: all this leading to the one conclusion, that the Church of the "Church tunes" was no other than the primal Church of England, that still lived in the memories of the people—if in no other way, at least in the venerable tunes which once had been the vehicle of a primitive metrical translation of the Psalter.

And such time-hallowed origin can alone account for the respect the "Church tunes" met with at the hands of the great composers of the day. The very year after the old version made its appearance with its "apt notes," came out these tunes, with harmonies by seven of the leading musicians of the time, one of these harmonists, let us note, being Thomas Tallis. And every few years appeared a fresh setting of these old tunes, with the addition of other tunes from known and unknown sources—yet still evermore with harmonies by the first pens of the day—all showing in what high esteem these melodies were held, for reasons that certainly their intrinsic musical worth will not always account for.

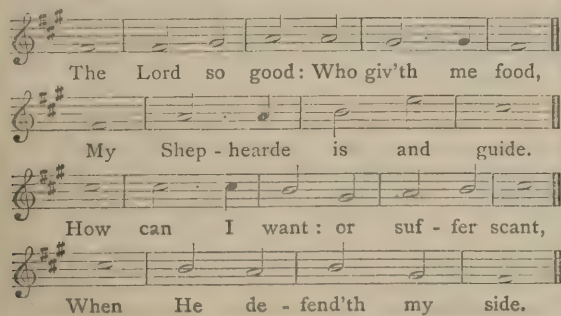

But does it not seem strange that, after all, the venerable "Church tune" should not have been formally and heartily enthroned within our Church walls; that it—the ancient chant form of the primal British Church—kept alive in the people's hearts and memories through the long centuries of the foreign spiritual occupation of our land—should, after all, be only able to plead for itself, "allowed to be sung in churches,"—squeezing in, at the Church doors most probably, under shelter of its duly accredited sister the Anthem? Now, the grand foundation of our Reformed Church is an open Bible, and it would be quite contrary to her whole spirit and principle to put man's writing in the place of God's word, or to adopt a less accurate translation of the Scriptures in the place of the more accurate.

So it is, that while not one word of permission appears in the whole Prayer Book for metrical hymns, there stands the inexorable injunction, "in choirs and places where they sing (wherever they sing at all) here followeth the anthem"—the anthem being the exposition and quickening by music of the selected text, as the sermon is such exposition and quickening by the sister Art of Oratory. And so it is that, while the metrical psalm does never say for itself more than "allowed to be sung in churches," the Prayer Book's title page evermore bears witness to the will of the Church, that the Psalms shall be "sung in church," if musical ability be lacking for this singing, then at least "said" in the people's monotone.

Now, the two great names that stand forth in all Church matters musical, in those Reformation days, are those of Tallis and Archbishop Parker—Tallis, one of the first seven harmonists of the "Church tunes"—Parker, who, to wile away the weary hours of exile during the Marian persecution, set the whole of the Psalms into what he calls "the people's vulgar verse;" and to this version of Parker's, Tallis set his Eight great tunes, so that we know that these two leading minds were thus, at any rate, brought together over the subject. And dear to the hearts of these two friends—the Church musician and the Archbishop—we may be sure, was the old Church tune, not willingly would they have left it wholly outside the walls of the sanctuary. And we can well imagine the question would rise up before them, "Is there any form into which we can throw the venerable chant form of the 'Church tune,' so that, while we adhere to the closest translation of God's Word—necessarily the prose translation—we may still employ, to some extent, the ancient formula." Let us see how they returned answer to themselves.

Now, the old "Common Measure" was not as we have it now in its looser form, merely 8, 6; 8, 6, with rhyming sixes, but it was really 4, 4, 6; 4, 4, 6—the pairs of four rhyming—and the tune originally exactly corresponded in its phrasing to this division. Let us take an example—a verse from Parker's version of the 23rd Psalm, set to the "Cheshire tune" of Este's Psalter—

The Lord so good: Who giv'th me food,
My Shep - hearde is and guide.
How can I want: or suf - fer scant,
When He de - fend'th my side.

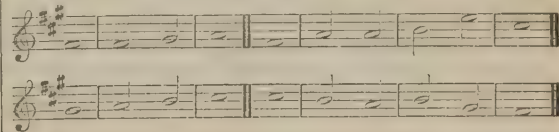

Now, to a 4 that we can begin with of this tune (prolonging the fourth note to two beats) let us add a 6 that we can end with, and let us consider the initial note of each line elastic. Let us take the first 4 and last 6, for example, and we get this—or the very form that Tallis, doubtless with Parker's full agreement, inaugurated as the Chant of the Reformed Church of England. We cannot for one moment suppose that Tallis stumbled across the 4, 6 form by mere accident. So deeply imbued as he was with the true "Church Tune" form—witness his own tunes—he could not but have recognised the relation between the two, if presented to him by other hand than his own. Moreover this was an entirely new form. Two other chant-forms are used in our service, the 3, 2, Athanasian Creed Chant, and the 2, 4 Litany Chant. Either of these would have made a useful psalm chant form; indeed, a strong effort, as we know, was made a few years ago to introduce the former under the title of the Free Chant. There was also the Italian recitative-chant, now called the Gregorian. Tallis probably would not have had the opportunity of becoming acquainted with Palestrina's clever arrangements of interchangeable heads and tails, now called "The tones and endings;" but enough of the floating scraps, out of which the great Italian concocted his system, must have been well known to our Tallis, to have enabled him to accept or reject what would now be called "The Gregorian System." No—knowing all these chant-forms, and probably others too, he advisedly inaugurated one more consisting of two lines of the old "church tune." And here, too, we have doubtless the origin of the Anglican double-chant. There is a silly story told, how a pupil of Hine's of Gloucester, through inattention played two single chants of the same key to two consecutive verses of the psalms—how the careless mistake was admired, and was forthwith imitated into a system. The story at once falls through before the recollection, that double chants can be produced of date long anterior to Mr. Hine and his pupil—that they can, in fact, be traced back nearly to the days of Tallis himself. The compactness of the single chant, and its consequent greater similarity to the earlier chant-forms, would doubtless recommend the shorter form to a man of Tallis's stamp of mind. But it could not have escaped his eye, and the eyes of succeeding church-musicians, that what we call the double chant lay hid, so to speak, in the Common Measure church-tune, as well as the shorter single chant.

Taking 4, 6; 4, 6 of the C. M. tune, with elastic initial bars and complete final bars to the 4's when needed, we get the double chant. Applying this to our example tune, for instance, we have—

And so the reverse operation may be performed; repeat the 4's of a double chant, and the result is 8, 6; 8, 6, taking the bar as non-elastic, and adjusting it with the final bars, where needed, we have a C. M. tune.

And thus we see that our little chant-form is English to the very marrow. It is no "barred Gregorian," as the phrase runs; it has no more to do with Gregorians than the old Common Measure "Church-tunes" have to do with the mediæval hymn-tunes. The Gregorian is foreign in all its aspects—foreign in interval, foreign in feeling, founded on the foreign sense of recitative. Most true, indeed, is the constant assertion of the upholders of the Gregorian Chant, that "the People of England have to be educated to it"—as surely educated to it, as to the Latin Psalter, to whose rhythm the foreign chant seems specially cast. On the contrary, all the salient points of the national musical taste seem to be met in the Anglican Chant—first and foremost, that strong sense of melodic rhythm and precise measure. Could but the people of England divest their minds of a lurking suspicion against all chanting, arising from the wholly erroneous idea that there is but one source from which came all chants—the same source whence came the Gregorian Chant—would they but bear in mind the hallowed sanction conveyed in the words, “And when they had sung a hymn, they went out”—words that tell us the Saviour chanted with His disciples a Pascal psalm, on that ever-memorable night—could they but feel how commended to us, by its history, comes our little English chant—surely, most heartfelt and earnest would become the singing of the only hymnal of the Church of England, The Prose Psalter.

Little “educating” would the people find they would want, to recite in a clear bold unison the mother-tongue strains—voices not trained enough to hold the notes of a hymn-tune with the needful firmness, would find no difficulty in clearly speaking out the sacred words in the short little chant formula.

There would be little of the present listless waiting till the choir have done chanting—to the hopeless dispersion of concentrated thought—the holy words would be stamped on the minds and memories of the singers, to be an unfailing cruise of comfort in life’s wear and tear, and that truest of worship would be offered to the Almighty—the worship as of one heart and one voice.

THE re-appearance of Mr. Sims Reeves, after his severe and protracted indisposition, is an event upon which not only do we heartily congratulate him, but the many who believe with us that even the temporary absence of so true an artist from our concert-rooms is a national loss. We have no apprehension that a style so perfectly matured as that of Mr. Reeves can be in the slightest degree deteriorated even by an illness of long duration; but his singing at the recent Handel Festival, and also at his own concert, has proved to us that he returns with a voice not only unimpaired, but strengthened in tone by the cessation for a time from any active exertion. His performance at the Crystal Palace in Opera is a sign that he does not intend to remain unemployed now that his health is restored; and we sincerely hope that the public will feel convinced that nothing short of positive incapacity, from indisposition, to fulfil an engagement has ever prevented his appearing before those numerous admirers of his talent whose sympathy with his absence has not always been so obviously demonstrated as their pleasure at his presence.

MR. JOHN HULLAH’s Report of the Examination in Music of Training Schools in Great Britain for 1873 is too voluminous for insertion in our columns; but we may say that we read with much interest his remarks concerning the want of musical training exhibited by the average student; and quite agree with him that so long as pupils are sent into the Colleges with scarcely any preparation, either of voice or ear, there is but small hope of reform. He passes somewhat tenderly over the subject of the “moveable Do” theory; but his remarks are much to the purpose, and scarcely antagonistic enough, we think, to provoke hostility in the camp of the “Tonic Solfa-ists.” Speaking of the difficulties inherent to combined musical instruction, he says “The business of the teacher in a Training College is not (save incidentally) to form a pleasing choir, but a body of vocal musicians, every individual member of which shall be able to teach vocal music.” This is quite true; but we much doubt whether the truth is universally acted upon.

OUR petted Queens of Song do so little for real art that any exception to the rule deserves to be recorded. Madame Adelina Patti having heard during her visit to Vienna that Musical Entertainments were to be given in several of the principal cities of Europe in aid of the funds of the “Mozart Institution” at Salzburg (the birth-place of the composer), immediately proffered her services in organising and assisting at a Festival in London; and Mr. Gye, the Lessee of the Royal Italian Opera, with the principal artists of his establishment, having also lent their valuable aid in the good cause, a concert was given at Covent Garden Theatre on the 16th ult., the programme of which was entirely devoted to the compositions of Mozart. That the performance was a great success, and that a large sum was realised on the occasion may be inferred, considering the excellence of the music and the talent of the vocalists; and should the example of Madame Patti be followed by artists of equally commanding position, other Institutions which we could mention of a similar character, might be largely benefited by their exertions.

THERE can be no doubt that the “London Gregorian Choral Association” is thoroughly in earnest. The recent Festival of the Society at St. Paul’s has been reported in our columns, and we have now received a pamphlet containing papers read at the Annual Meeting of the Association, held in the Hall of Sion College, London Wall, on Thursday, November 27th, 1873. Amongst these Essays that on the Construction of the Gregorian Tones, by C. Warwick Jordan, Mus. Bac., Oxon., will we imagine be the most interesting to the general public, for there is unquestionably much popular misapprehension on the subject. The pamphlet is accompanied with a paper headed “Reasons for becoming a member of the London Gregorian Choral Association,” by E. H. B., and one of the reasons is that the music performed by the Society is “Congregational.” As an important work given at the late Festival was an eight-part Anthem by Jacobus Händl, we presume that even at Gregorian gatherings the “Congregation” must be content occasionally to become listeners.

OUR readers will, we are sure, be glad to find that at the recent banquet given by the Lord Mayor to the representatives of literature and art, so many persons of the highest eminence in music were present. It can scarcely perhaps be expected that the great civic host should know much of the subject upon which he was talking when proposing “music” as one of the toasts of the evening; and therefore we may excuse him for believing that the art is represented by the two lyrical establishments of the metropolis; but it is a matter of much regret that, with Madlle. Titens and Madame Christine Nilsson sitting at the table, he should have selected Madame Adelina Patti to receive the title of the “Queen of Song,” and to respond (through her husband) for an honour which she should have shared with her gifted sisters in art. No doubt the Marquis de Caux might have smoothed the difficulty by refusing to accept so exclusive a compliment; but the Lord Mayor was himself responsible for the wording of the toast; and if he could not trust himself to put it in the right form, he should have been content to be instructed by those competent to “coach” him up for the occasion.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE illustrations of National Music, which have been continued during the past month, have proved perhaps somewhat too exclusive to achieve unqualified success. This was more especially observable when the programme was limited to the works of Russian and Polish composers, and also when the concert was strictly devoted to quaint and humorous works, most of the audience feeling, on the latter occasion, that a few bars of serious music would have been a positive relief. The experiment, however, has been an exceedingly interesting one; and although it may not be repeated, praise must be given for the originality of the idea. The concerts have been invariably well attended.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THE production of Verdi's feeble Opera, "Luisa Miller," with Madame Patti as the heroine, is the solitary event worth recording since our last notice. We need scarcely say how the part was sung by a vocalist so thoroughly accomplished, and can only express our regret that such brilliant powers should be exercised upon music which can merely be galvanised into a temporary vitality whilst singers so gifted as Madame Patti and audiences so insensible to the charm of real art as those who form the main support of our lyrical establishments can be found united in the desire to maintain it. The "Mozart Festival"—a concert chiefly consisting of scraps from the composer's Operas—realised a good sum for the Educational Institution at Salzburg, in aid of which it was given; and Madame Patti and the many other artists who contributed their services on the occasion, deserve the warmest commendation. The season terminated on the 18th ult. with a performance of Meyerbeer's Opera, "L'Etoile du Nord."

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

MADAME CHRISTINE NILSSON has created a very decided success in the character of Leonora, in "Il Trovatore," both her singing and acting having the very highest order of merit; and she has also added another character to those already associated with her name by her excellent assumption of the part of Valentina, in "Les Huguenots" on the occasion of her benefit. Madlle. Titens deserves every praise for selecting the character of Leonora, in Beethoven's "Fidelio," for her benefit night; and we have much pleasure in recording that the house was filled to overflowing. At the end of the performance, being called on the stage, Madlle. Titens received a perfect ovation, and in addition to the usual floral offerings, many gifts of the most costly description were handed to her. The last night of the season was Saturday the 18th ult., but an extra night, for the benefit of Mr. Mapleson, was given on the following Monday, when "Don Giovanni" was performed. Madlle. Titens as Donna Anna, and Madame Nilsson as Donna Elvira were of course everything that could be desired; but Madlle. Singelli was scarcely the ideal Zerlina, and Herr Behrens was a somewhat heavy Leporello. Signor De Reschi, too, although singing much of the music extremely well, lacked the vitality inseparable from Mozart's Don Giovanni; but Signor Gillandi's Don Ottavio and Mr. Perkins's Commendatore were thoroughly satisfactory performances.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

AN interesting feature in the programme of the seventh concert, on the 29th June, was Brahms's Serenade in A, "for small orchestra," a remarkable peculiarity in the score being the absence of violins. Whether this may be regarded as a little bit of affectation on the part of the composer it is impossible to say; but certain it is, that in many portions of the work the somewhat sombre tone of the stringed instruments employed seems to detract from the general effect of the composition. The Scherzo and Trio (forming the second movement) pleased so much as to be encored; but the third movement, in A minor, in our opinion, contains the best writing in the Serenade, and, indeed, is full—almost to overflowing—of the most charmingly melodious phrases, the only objection being the want of that continuity of idea which arrests the attention, and compels the mind of the listener rather to follow the composer in his development of one theme than to be constantly startled by the appearance of new ones. The last movement, which is decidedly pastoral in character, contains many excellent points, the second subject, especially, being exceedingly happy, and the instrumentation throughout showing that the composer has deeply studied orchestral effect. The work was listened to with profound attention, and elicited enthusiastic applause. Arthur Sullivan's MS. Overture to "Marmion"—remodelled and much improved since its first performance at this Society—was well received, and, although not one of his best works, will, no doubt, be occasionally heard at these concerts, as it was originally written for the Society. The rendering of Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor, by Madame Essipoff, could scarcely be surpassed for delicacy of touch, decision of phrasing, and perfection of execution; and if occasionally we missed that tenderness so essential to the music of this composer, it is rather perhaps because we linger over those old associations, which seem dismissed by the majority of the audience as belonging to a past school of executive art. The eighth, and final concert of the season, on the 13th ult., contained a programme of well-worn works, concluding, as usual, with Weber's "Jubilee Overture." Beethoven's Concerto in G scarcely received full justice from M. Saint-Saëns, who made but a small impression upon the audience; and Stradella's rather tiresome Cantata, "Il Nerone," although sung by Mr. Santley, and scored for the occasion by Sir Michael Costa, was rather tamely received. Mr. W. G. Cousins conducted both the concerts under notice with his usual ability, and received, as he deserved, the warmest applause.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THE annual public concert of this Institution was given at the Hanover Square Rooms on Saturday, the 25th ult., under the able conductorship of Mr. Walter Macfarren. As an exhibition of the progress of the pupils in this national establishment, both in the executive and creative departments of the art, the performance was perhaps the most thoroughly satisfactory of that at any previous Academy concert; and the interest evinced upon the occasion was sufficiently proved by the fact of the room being so densely packed that many persons were compelled to stand. Amongst the most remarkable compositions of the students, special commendation must be given to the selection from a Motett by Oliveria Prescott—in which Mr. Walter Fitton played the organ part, and Miss Jessie Jones sang the soprano solo—and an Andante from a Symphony in B minor, by Florence Marshall, both of which evidence the possession not only of musical feeling and knowledge of effect, but of an originality of thought which may, if carefully directed, place their composers at the head of the small list of ladies who have created a name in this important branch of the art. Mr. A. H. Jackson's Overture, "Dans les bois," is also a highly creditable work, and Mr. Corder's sacred song, "Who shall ascend," (well sung by Miss Marian Williams) has considerable merit. The pianoforte playing was, as usual a conspicuous feature in the selection, the average talent represented being of a very high class. Miss McCarty in Mendelssohn's Rondo in B minor, Mr. Eaton Fanning, in the Rondo from Sir Julius Benedict's Concerto in E flat, Miss Martin in the first movements of Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto, Miss Troup in the last two movements of Mendelssohn's Concerto in D minor, Miss Whitaker in the first movement of Sir Sterndale Bennett's Concerto in F minor, and Miss Ludovici in the Pianoforte part of Hummel's Septet in D minor (first movement), fully sustained the reputation of the Institution, and reflected the utmost credit both upon themselves and their teachers; and we must also mention the intelligent—if somewhat affected—performance of two of Chopin's pieces by Mr. Boutenof. The rendering of Sainton's Violin Concerto in A, by Madlle. Gabrielle Vaillant elicited, as it deserved, a storm of applause; and Mr. Palmer's performance of the last movement of Spohr's Concerto was so remarkable as to make us wonder that so excellent a violinist should be still a student. Master Spear was the only organist exhibited, but his playing of Mendelssohn's Sonata in D, No. 5, showed that the instrument is carefully cultivated in the Academy. Miss Nessie Goode (in "Voi che sapete," Miss Beasley in Mr. G. A. Macfarren's expressive song, "When I remember," Miss Mary Davies and Miss Mahé Duval in Mendelssohn's Duet, with chorus, "I waited for the Lord," and Mr. Wadmore in Handel's "Honour and arms," won the good opinion of all competent judges, by their careful singing. After a few words from the Principal, Sir Sterndale Bennett, in which he warmly thanked the Professors for having, by their unwearied exertions, brought the Academy to its present high state of efficiency, the prizes were distributed by Madame Sainton-Dolby. The awards were as follows—

FEMALE DEPARTMENT—Silver Medals: Misses Llewellyn Bagnall (Singing), Emma Beasley (Singing), Beata Francis (Singing), Eliza J. Hopkins (Pianoforte), Annie J. Martin, (Pianoforte), Isabella McCarty (pianoforte). Bronze Medals: Misses Edith Brand, Mary E. Boole, Margaret Bucknall, Clara Buley, Janie Burrough, Clara Daniel, Mary Davies, Julia De Nolte, Ellen Edridge, Ellen Hancock, Helen Pamphilon, Gabrielle Vaillant. Books: Misses Catherine Beaumont, Alice Borton, Grace Bolton, Fanny Boxell, Mary E. Butterworth, Julia Chute, Alice Chapman, Maria Combs, Annie Doorty, Marie Duval, Emily M. Edger, Lita Farrar, Marion Green, Constance Harper, Catherine Kaupp, Alice Newall, Anna Maria Osborne, Harriet Robeson, Elizabeth L. Rothwell, Mary E. Webb, Marian Williams, Mary Jane Williams, Jane Whitaker. Letters of Commendation: Miss Clara Cooper, Lucy Ellam, Mary Jane Franklin, Julia Kirk, Clara E. Lilwall, Kate Lyons, Aurelia Oertling, Maria Pascoe Pearce, Anna M. Roby, Julia Searle, Maria Tate. Sterndale Bennett Prize (Purse, containing Ten Guineas): Miss Alice Mary Curtis. Parepa-Rosa Scholarship (Two Years' Free Education in the Institution), awarded to Miss Anne Elizabeth Bolingbroke. Parepa-Rosa Gold Medal: Miss Nessie Goode. Westmorland Scholarship (Ten Pounds towards the cost of a Year's Instruction): Miss Emma L. Beasley (re-elected in December last).

MALE DEPARTMENT—Silver Medal: Mr. George Palmer (Violin). Bronze Medals: Messrs. William W. Bampfylde, Eugene W. Boutenof, Joseph A. Breeden, Arthur H. Jackson, Charlton Spear, Dudley Thomas. A Prize Violin Bow (kindly given to the Institution by Mr. James Tubbs, of Wardour Street): Mr. Ladislas Szczepanowski. Books: Messrs. Haydon Aldersey, Arthur Jackson, Alexander G. Jopp, Henry W. Little, Thomas Silver. Sterndale Bennett Scholarship (Two Years' Free Education in the Institution), awarded to Master Charlton Spear. Potter Exhibition (Twelve Pounds towards the cost of a Year's Instruction), awarded to Mr. Walter Fitton. The Examiners were, Composition and Harmony—The Principal (Sir Sterndale Bennett), Mr. H. C. Lunn, and Dr. C. Steggall. Pianoforte—Mr. W. G. Cusins, Mr. W. Dorrell, Mr. H. R. Eyers, Mr. F. B. Jewson, Mr. Walter Macfarren, Mr. Arthur O'Leary, and Mr. Westlake. Singing—Mr. F. R. Cox, Signor Ettore Fiori, Signor Garcia, Signor Gilardoni, and Signor A. Randegger. Orchestral Instruments—Mr. F. R. Folkes, Mr. H. Weist Hill, Mr. Walter Pettit, M. Sainton, and Mr. Watson. Organ—Sir John Goss and Mr. G. A. Macfarren.

On the 23rd ult., the organ in the St. George's Wesleyan Chapel, St. George's-in-the-East, was re-opened, after being rebuilt and considerably enlarged. Organ performances were given by Mr. J. Grout of All Saints', Poplar, Mr. J. Young, of St. Ann's, Limehouse, and Mr. J. S. Nimkey, the chapel organist. Amongst the music performed, may be mentioned, as particularly worthy of praise, Wely's Offertoire in G, by Mr. Grout; Mendelssohn's 4th Organ Sonata, by Mr. Young; and Beethoven's "Hallelujah to the Father," by Mr. Nimkey. The choir assisted with anthems, &c.

THE vocalists already engaged at the forthcoming Liverpool Festival are Madame Adelina Patti, Mdle.

Albani, Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Patey, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Bentham, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Santley, and Herr Conrad Behrens, the new German bass. The Festival will commence in the Philharmonic Hall on Tuesday, the 29th September, with a performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul"—a work which Liverpool had the honour of first introducing to this country. A miscellaneous concert will take place the same evening, at which Mr. G. A. Macfarren's new Overture, specially composed for the Festival, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, and the Overture to Wagner's "Tannhäuser," will be played. The first and second parts of Haydn's "Creation;" selections from Handel's "Messiah," "Israel in Egypt," &c.; Gounod's new Mass, "Angeli Custodes," and Cantata, "Joan of Arc;" Beethoven's Choral Symphony, No. 9, and the Overture to Rossini's "William Tell," will be performed as the chief features of morning and evening concerts on Wednesday the 30th. M. Gounod will direct the Mass and Cantata, and Mrs. Weldon will assist at the performance of the latter. On Thursday morning, October 1, Mr. Arthur Sullivan's Oratorio, "The Light of the World," will be given for the first time in Liverpool, the composer conducting the performance. The programme of the evening concert on that day will comprise Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, a pianoforte Concerto by Chopin, and Mr. J. F. Barnett's "Suite de Pieces" for orchestra, entitled "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," which has been specially composed for the Festival. Mr. Barnett will direct the execution of his work. The date of the production of Sir Julius Benedict's promised Symphony has not been decided upon. The choir, which will be freely selected, according to all accounts, will be the finest ever heard in Liverpool, and the orchestra will consist of one hundred executants, one-half of whom are metropolitan, and the other provincial.

MR. ALFRED GILBERT, on his retirement from the office of organist at St. Mark's Church, Hamilton Terrace, has been presented by the members of the Choir with an elegant time-piece, bearing a suitable inscription, as an acknowledgment of his services in connection with the music of the Church for the space of thirteen years.

MR. WILLIAM HENRY MONK, on the resignation of Mr. John Hullah, has been appointed Professor of Vocal Music in King's College, London, an institution in which he has long and most ably fulfilled the duties of Organist and Director of the Choir.

The result of the Society of Arts' Examination in Music, just issued, shows that 102 persons have received certificates from the examiner, Mr. J. Hullah. Mr. Curwen informs us that 62 of these, including the first prizeman, are Tonic Sol-faists.

MR. JOHN THOMAS gave a "Grand Harp Concert" at the Hanover Square Rooms, on the 27th June, before a large audience. The performance of the bénéficiaire was of course the principal event of the morning; and we may say that, in two pieces by Parish Alvars, in one of his own "Illustrations of the Seasons," and also in his Duet in E flat minor (in which he was ably assisted by Madlle. Esmeralda Cervantes, a wonderfully clever girl, only thirteen years of age), he was eminently successful, and elicited the most enthusiastic applause. There was also a band of harps; and the vocalists—Miss Edith Wynne, Madlle. Enriquez, Signor Gardoni, and Mr. Santley—contributed several vocal pieces to a highly attractive concert.

A SUCCESSFUL concert was given at the Store Street Rooms (in aid of the Organ Fund of Christ Church, Bloomsbury), by Mr. H. Walmsley Little, the Organist, on Monday, June 22nd. Miss Emma Beasley, Miss Gertrude Bradwyn, Mr. W. A. Howells, and the Church Choir, were the vocalists; and the instrumentalists were Madlle. Vaillant (violin), Miss Augusta Aptommas (harp), and Mr. H. Walmsley Little (pianoforte), Mr. A. Jarratt acting as accompanist. Miss Emma Beasley and Miss Bradwyn were encored in their songs, as was also Miss Aptommas in her harp solo; Madlle. Vaillant played with much effect Ernst's "Elegie," and joined Mr. H. Walmsley Little in Dussek's Sonata for violin and pianoforte; and Mr. W. A. Howells was highly successful in his rendering of Blumenthal's "Message." There was a large audience.

A YOUNG Spanish harpist, Senorita Esmeralda Cervantes, gave a concert at the Hanover Square Rooms, on the 13th ult., when she displayed a power remarkable for a girl of only thirteen years of age. In two solos, a brilliant duet, for harp and violin, from "Masaniello" (with Madlle. Castellan); and also in John Thomas's duet for two harps, in E flat minor (in which she was assisted by the composer), her performance was characterised by extreme delicacy of phrasing and highly-finished execution, and she was most warmly and deservedly applauded. Several instrumental and vocal artists lent their assistance, and the concert was a decided success.

THE members of the Choir of St. Mary, West Brompton, went for their annual excursion on Monday, the 13th ult., to Cookham, on the Thames, and permission having been kindly given by His Grace the Duke of Westminster, his grounds at Cliveden were thrown open to them. At the dinner, which took place at the inn at Cookham, the gentlemen of the Choir took the opportunity of presenting Mr. Horace Buttery, organist and director of the choir, with a handsome and massive gold lapid signet-ring, with suitable inscription. Mr. Radcliffe, secretary of the Choir, in presenting it, spoke in highly complimentary terms of Mr. Buttery, who replied in a few, but most appropriate words. At the close of the day a full choral service was performed by the Choir, in Cookham Church (by kind consent of the Vicar of Cookham); and it should be mentioned that the service was almost entirely sung from memory; the Rev. G. Moor, curate of St. Mary's, officiating, and Mr. Buttery presiding at the organ.

THE Concerts of the Welsh Choral Union, under the direction of Mr. John Thomas, the last of which was given on the 20th ult., have thoroughly sustained the reputation which the Society has gained during the comparatively short time it has been established. The singing of the Choir shows a steady improvement; and there can be little doubt that it has done much towards winning the sympathies of London audiences for those genuine specimens of Welsh melodies which it is the natural desire of the natives of the Principality to preserve. We cordially wish the Association all the success it has so studiously and conscientiously endeavoured to acquire.

MR. HENRY LESLIE gave the last concert of the present season on the 25th June, the programme, although presenting no novelty, being excellently selected to display the capabilities of the choir. Miss Edith Wynne elicited much applause by her artistic rendering of the solo part in Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," and Miss Bolingbroke, who has been elected to the Parepa-Rosa Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, sang with much taste and expression, and was warmly received. Mr. J. G. Callcott was the accompanist, and Mr. John C. Ward organist.

A RECORD of the decease of Herr Paul Mendelssohn Bartholdy, which occurred recently at Berlin, should have place in a musical journal, not only because he was a brother of Felix Mendelssohn, but because it is to him we owe the publication of the composer's letters. Herr Paul was himself a performer on the violoncello, and we believe that more than one of his brother's pieces was written for him.

MR. SIMS REEVES'S Benefit Concert at the Royal Albert Hall, on the 29th June, was one of the most brilliant events of the musical season. Apart from the attraction offered by an excellent programme interpreted by first-rate artists, there was the pleasure of welcoming the return of our great tenor after his long indisposition; and so overwhelming was the enthusiasm of the audience on his appearance, that, accustomed as he is to an exceptionally cordial reception, it was some time before he could recover himself sufficiently to sing. In Blumenthal's "Message" (accompanied by the composer), the "Rose Song," from "Il Talismano" (which in the brighter days of English Opera was written expressly for him), and "Tom Bowling" (a song he has now made so thoroughly his own, that nobody else dare attempt it), he created even more than his usual effect; and, in the duet with Madame Nilsson, "Ah Morir," from "Ernani," both vocalists sang so finely that they were compelled to yield to the unanimous demand for its repetition. Besides Madame Nilsson, several eminent artists contributed vocal pieces; and instrumental solos were given by Madame Norman-Néruda (violin) and Mr. W. Coenen (pianoforte), Dr. Stainer presiding at the organ. An interesting item in the programme was the excellent singing of some part-music by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Barnby. The Hall was densely crowded in every part.

THE July Concert of the St. George's Glee Union was given on the 3rd ult., when the programme included, "In these delightful pleasant groves," "The Echo," "Sweet and low," "O my love's like a red, red rose," and "In a wood" (the latter being exceptionally well rendered); and, for male voices, "Bright sword," and "Strike the lyre." Miss Bessie Stroud sang most effectively Cowen's new song, "It was a dream;" Miss Clara Buley gave O'Leary's "Listening" very tastefully; and Mr. Williams and Mr. Thurley Beale contributed songs with marked success. Miss Denison played "Wayside Sketch" (O'Leary), and a Rondo by Sir S. Bennett with much brilliancy, and also joined Miss Buley in a duet, for two pianos, by G. A. Osborne.

THE second trial of new compositions by the recently formed "Musical Artists' Society" took place on Wednesday evening, the 22nd ult., at the Fine Arts Gallery, Conduit Street. Amongst the works performed may be especially mentioned a very clever Sonata in F minor, for pianoforte alone, played by the composer, Mr. H. C. Banister; an excellently written Trio in C minor, by Mr. J. F. Barnett, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, finely rendered by Miss Emma Barnett, Mr. Palmer, and Herr Lidel, and an effective and musician-like Duet for the pianoforte, by Mr. C. E. Stephens, the merits of which were fully revealed by Miss Ellen Day and the composer, both of whom were called forward at the conclusion of the performance. Three Hungarian Dances by Brahms were also well played, as pianoforte Duets, by Miss Clara Daniel and Miss Turner-Burnett, and several vocal pieces—especially two by Oliveria Prescott—elicited the warmest applause.

MRS. SCOTT SIDDONS'S Matinée, at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 29th June, introduced Master Harry Walker, the young pianist, of whom we have frequently made favourable mention, for the first time since his return from America. The careful training this boy was receiving at the Royal Academy of Music has been sadly checked by his being pushed forward as a travelling "infant prodigy;" and assuredly the change of name from Walker to "Seraphaël" will not raise him in the estimation of those who have helped him to his position in the world of art. Much of the music he is now performing is by no means suitable either for his age or his capacity; but the applause with which he was greeted proved that the majority of the audience did not agree with us. We still hope that Master Walker may be induced to drop the affected sobriquet he has assumed, and work more in the study than the concert-room.

WE record with much regret the death of Mr. William John Fielding, at the age of 48. Mr. Fielding was well known as an excellent alto singer, and was for many years one of the Vicars Choral of St. Paul's.

At the recent Church Choral Society's examination, the following gentlemen duly satisfied the examiners:—Senior Choral Fellows: J. A. Alloway, Ch.F., Draper's College, Tottenham; W. J. Jennings, Ch.F., B.A., Queen's College, Cambridge; H. J. Stark (by competition) New College, Oxford; D. Thackeray, Mus.B., Oxon., Mus.D., Trinity College, Dublin. Choral Fellows: J. T. Field, St. Germain's, Blackheath; Ernest C. Winchester, Holy Trinity, Wimbledon; Llewellyn H. Winter, St. John's, Kingston. Examiners: Messrs. E. Dearle, Mus. D., Cantab.; H. G. Bonavia Hunt, S.C.F. (Warden); W. H. Sangster, Mus.B., Oxon.; and J. Gordon Saunders, S.C.F., Mus. B., Oxon.

We are informed that Mr. H. G. Trembath, Mus. Bac., Oxon, Truro, has been awarded the 5-guinea prize offered by the College of Organists for the best Evening Service (Cantate and Deus), with obligato organ.

THE Vicar and several members of the congregation at Christ Church, Hampstead, have presented their organist, Miss Cooper (daughter of Mr. J. T. Cooper), with a handsome and valuable diamond ring, in recognition of their appreciation of her musical ability and assiduity in the fulfilment of her church duties. This is the second present Miss Cooper has received from the congregation.

A VERY excellent musical performance was given by the pupils of the London Society for Teaching the Blind to Read, at the Institution, Upper Avenue Road, Regent's Park, on the 17th ult., the Rev. T. J. Rowsell, M.A., in the chair. An interesting feature in the programme was a selection from Mr. G. A. Macfarren's Oratorio "St. John the Baptist," which was so well rendered as to call forth unqualified praise from the composer himself, who also expressed his satisfaction at the zeal and energy displayed by the Society's Conductor, Mr. Edwin Barnes.

THE West London and Kilburn Musical Society gave a concert on Monday evening, the 6th ult., before a large audience. The programme included the first and second parts of the "Creation," the solos being allotted to Miss Georgina Maudsley, Mr. Greenhill, and Mr. Kilbey. Miss Maudsley received the warmest applause for her rendering of "With verdure clad," and "On mighty pens;" Mr. Greenhill was encored in the air, "In native worth," and Mr. Kilbey was also highly successful. The choir sang steadily, and was well supported by the band. Mr. W. Beavan was, as usual, the conductor. A miscellaneous selection followed, in which Miss Warwick (who received an encore for both her songs), Mr. Greenhill, Mr. Norton, Miss Taylor, and others contributed several vocal pieces. Messrs. John and William Beavan accompanied.

REVIEWS.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

Israel, in Adversity and in Deliverance. A Sacred Cantata, in Two Parts. Composed by C. G. Verrinder, Mus. Doc.

THAT the great works in art are not—we might almost say professedly—mere imitations of those which have preceded them may be stated as a generally admitted truth; and yet constantly are we called upon to criticise Symphonies, Cantatas, Oratorios and other compositions of the highest school of writing, every thought in which is clearly traceable to the models bequeathed to us by those who have thrown the individuality of their genius into their work, and thus dared to lead, instead of being content to follow. True it is that, were the creations of skilled and accredited artists, who are satisfied to work by line and rule, completely ignored, and only those of original thinkers accepted, our repertory of works would become somewhat limited, but would the progress of real art be impeded? Certainly excellence, rather than novelty, would then be the attraction offered at our public performances; but we cannot be made to see that this would be a disadvantage: recent revivals of musical masterpieces have sufficiently proved to us that, whilst we have spent our time in endeavouring to discover isolated beauties in many modern compositions, perfect gems have for years been allowed to remain uncared for; and it is an indisputable fact that numerous works by the greatest composers are still known but to the few who—although the art itself, in its highest sense, is comparatively young—are, strangely enough, termed musical "antiquarians." We wish it to be distinctly understood that we have not been led to make these remarks solely from a perusal of Dr. Verrinder's Cantata: it is unquestionably the composition of a trained and well-qualified musician, and the writing throughout proves that it is also the production of one well versed in what may be termed "the history of his art;" but it is the type of a class; and if such types are worth multiplying, then do we say that Dr. Verrinder has as much right to be heard as many others who have worked as truthfully and as zealously according to the patterns which they have a right to respect. The Overture, beginning with a stately Andante, in D minor, and followed by an Allegro, in the tonic major, would do well as a "Study after the manner of Handel;" but, as an abstract composition, it has little value. The opening Chorus is the best in the work, the wailing effect of the commencing phrases, in B minor, being well-contrasted with the long holding notes with which it concludes. We like also the Tenor Solo, which, although it does not strike the ear as original, is tuneful and sympathetic with the words. The Semi-chorus, "Wash you, make you clean," contains many good points, but is wearisome from its length, and the monotonous triplet accompaniment. The short contralto solo, which follows a Tenor recitative, reminds us of Mendelssohn, without our being able to assert that the notes are the same that occur in any composition of his with which we are acquainted. All we can say is that Dr. Verrinder had this composer in his mind when he wrote it. Some really good effects occur in the Chorus of Prophets and People, the subject of which has been previously heard as a solo for the Soprano, and the Semi-chorus which concludes the first Part is skillfully harmonised, and well-written for the voices. An Instrumental Prelude commences the second Part, the character of which is in good keeping with the subject which it illustrates, although it seems to want the orchestra for the full realisation of the composer's intention. Two soprano solos now occur, in the same key, but sufficiently varied in character, the second—in 9-8 rhythm, and with a harp accompaniment—well-expressing the words, and perhaps being one of the most tuneful songs in the Cantata. We like the Chorus for two Choirs, "Sing unto the Lord," better than the inevitable Fugue which follows, although of course the first is merely introductory. The subject of the Fugue is one that will "work" rather than one that will "please;" and the workmanship is, in consequence, the principal feature in the composition. As an exercise, however, it deserves much praise, for it shows throughout that the composer has studied in a good school, and knows how to make the best use of his materials. There is much boldness in many of the fugal points, and the voice parts are written most effectively. The final movement again introduces the double choir, reminding us—we presume intentionally—of the theme of the Prelude to the second Part. This forms a fitting termination to the Cantata, which, as we have already said, shows much scholastic learning and an intimate acquaintance with the best works of the best masters.

Break forth into joy. Composed by T. Ridley Prentice.

HERE is a composition of great spirit with sufficient variety. It opens with a Solo for tenor or soprano, which well befits the jubilant nature of the subject. Then comes a Quartett, "The Lord hath comforted," in which the voice parts flow harmoniously and rhythmically; its effect is most agreeable. Lastly, there is a Chorus, "The Lord hath made bare," wherein the exultant character is resumed that marked the opening of the piece, which is capably sustained. We cannot reconcile with rule, and we do not wish that rule should be widened to admit of piece-making on the subject, the curious progression from the chord of $\frac{9}{5}$, where the 9th rises a 3rd to the root of the next chord, that occurs on page 155, score 1, bars 2 and 3, and score 3, bars 2 and 3, and elsewhere. Another indiscretion is the anticipation of D sharp over C bass in approaching a half-close on B, page 157, score 2, bar 2, and page 159, score 1, bar 3. All freshness is taken from the modulation into E minor by the foretaste of its leading-note, and we suggest—it is always easier to suggest than to originate—the substitution of E in the prior harmony, and the reservation of D sharp till the chord of B in both places. The general effect of a piece depends not on single notes, however, and there is stuff in this composition that will command a welcome wherever the anthem is heard.

Te Deum laudamus. Set to Music in the key of D by W. G. Willmore.

THIS is one more to the countless number of musical compositions for the Church, that betoken more feeling than ideas, and more of both than of knowledge. It shows that the writer has heard the elder ecclesiastical music, and is in the habit of hearing and perhaps playing the secular as well as sacred works of latest musicians; but it shows also that he cannot discriminate styles, and he consequently produces an incongruous confusion of ancient and modern, diatonic and chromatic. He tires us with repeated starts and closes in the key of D; now, this is a common practice of the old worthies, but it is not tiresome with them, because the simplicity of their plan leads us to look for nothing other than a perfect cadence at the end of every sentence, and the paramount prevalence of one tonic; whereas, in the piece under notice, their conciseness of phrasing is by no means universal, and the occasional modulations into remote, if not extraneous keys, prompts one to look for greater relief in the structure of the whole. The sensitive character of the leading note was not discovered until within little more than a century, and composers were wont to make this note descend to the 5th of the tonic chord. Modern ears are differently educated, and we long for the upward progression of the most delicate, but most imperious note in the scale; we bear the old practice, because it is in keeping with other peculiarities of the ancient style; but we are shocked by its misapplication in modern writing, where it contradicts peculiarities of modern practice. We forbear to name the technical irregularities that disfigure this Te Deum, but they are numerous enough to assure us that the composer has no vocation for that class of music, which should be the highest test of artistry. The accessories to worship are not trifling: and the power to pick out upon the keyboard more or less faithful recollections is not a sufficient qualification to entitle a musical writer to tread on such most sacred ground.

The 24th Psalm, "The earth is the Lord's." Composed by Louis Spohr. Adapted to the English version from the original German MSS. by W. T. Freemantle, and revised by Dr. S. S. Wesley.

IT is as though one of the great and gone came back into life, when we receive a new work from a master's hand fifteen years after himself has passed out of the world of action, and we welcome this entirely unknown work by Spohr with all the reverence due to the hero of his many successes, and rejoice to find that even death did not exhaust the riches of his genius. To what extent Dr. Wesley's revision makes him responsible for the purity of the publication, there is no means of guessing; but his avowed partiality for the author must have rendered the task congenial to him, and we read his name as a guarantee that the music has not been tampered with in changing its original for its English garb. Mr. Freemantle, the organist of St. Andrew's, Sharrow, Sheffield, has done his task so dexterously that he has preserved every word of the Bible version of the Psalm, with the exception of verse 6, which of course must have been omitted by the composer. This will make the publication far more acceptable than it could else have been for ecclesiastical and even for private use; since, with a natural inclination to the familiar, everybody would rather sing or hear the words he knows, than have their sense represented by any others. It is an unlucky consequence of this literary fidelity, however, that the words "gates" and "doors" are each set to two crotchets, which require detachment in performance, and which must have been written by Spohr to dissyllables. It is remarkable, how well, otherwise, the words and the notes agree. The universal popularity of the Messiah Chorus to the last four verses of the present text, "Lift up your heads," unhappily must interfere with the effect of their treatment by the later musician; but this inevitable obstacle is in some sort counterbalanced by the fact, that the portion of Spohr's work set to these words is by far the most spirited part of the whole, and as unlike to Handel as any music can be. The piece consists of but one movement, an admirable plan for sustaining its interest. Its opening is for chorus; it has then a strain for a solo alto, another for a soprano, one next for four voices, and finally the triumphal passage to which we have alluded for the full choir. It would be vain to speak of this as one of the best of its author's works, but it abounds in the progressions which, when Spohr himself was new among us, were the delight of all hearers, and which have by no means lost their charm with the loss of their novelty. The passage of quavers towards the end, given first to the trebles and inverted afterwards for the tenors, is full of vigour. It is a significant proof of the editor's care, that, in two places, he leaves a progression of 5ths between the outside parts, which one with less respect for his subject, and less discrimination between what is objectionable in rule and effect, might have attempted to alter, but could not have improved. The very long list of subscribers shows the wide interest the work has excited, and people must have formed strange expectations whose interest will not be fully satisfied by the music.

March for the Organ, by J. E. Richardson.

THE organist of Salisbury Cathedral may be credited with having written a March which, if not strikingly original, offers many points of undoubted interest. It is reserved to few, and those only of the highest genius, to produce a work of this nature which shall exhibit originality of conception and general attractiveness in combination. If, therefore, Mr. Richardson may be considered to have failed in one of these two particulars, it will be some consolation to him to feel that he has done so in company with many eminent composers. On the other hand, it is but fair to say that he has added to the repertory of organ music a composition which will be found easy and effective, fairly conceived, and thoughtfully carried out.

Sonata in G, for Pianoforte. Composed by M. E. Doorly.

ASPIRING writers who insist upon trying their "prentice hand" upon a classical form of composition must expect to be judged by a somewhat high standard of art. Graceful and unpretending little pianoforte pieces, testing only the power of writing melodious phrases and brilliant passages, may be allowed to pass with but slight comment, but a Sonata demands the faculty of construction as well as the facility of invention; and the fact that but few modern composers have been successful in the production of such works is a proof of the difficulties to be surmounted. Mr. Doorly's opening subject—consisting mainly of key-note and dominant arpeggios, repeated in the left hand, with a scale accompaniment—has not sufficient solidity to fix the attention of the listener; and although we have afterwards some very good writing, especially in the second theme, the nature of the principal motive prevents the possibility of avoiding monotony in the passages. There is some novelty in the accompaniment to the subject of the "Largo," but the movement as it advances wants interest, and the descending chromatic passage of thirds is feeble. The arpeggios for the right hand, which accompany the subject of the "Scherzo," are effective; and we like the imitations after the double bar; but the "Trio" is weak, and the two bars of silence seem to indicate that the composer scarcely knows what to do. The "Rondo" is merely a string of rambling passages, skill however being shown in the harmonies, which prove throughout that they are written by a musician. The concluding portion of the movement—after the double bar—is little else than a succession of scales, with octaves in contrary motion for the left hand. Mr. Doorly should study the Sonatas of the great masters before essaying a work of this proportion; but in pieces of smaller magnitude we see no reason why he should not be successful.

Hunting Song. (Hie away! Hie away!) Four-part Song. Words by Sir W. Scott. Music by G. Newcombe.

THE composer of this Part-song is resolved that his accompanist, as well as his choir, shall have something to do, for he not only gives us twenty bars of symphony before the voices commence, but the instrument has also an independent part occasionally throughout the choral portion. As a general rule, we consider this a mistake; for the best Part-songs are those in which the effects are produced by the voices alone. The composition is melodious, but the part-writing is extremely crude—as instances of which, we may mention the octaves B, E, between sopranos and basses (bar 5, page 7), and the C sharp (bar 3, page 6), which, although omitted in the accompaniment, is taken by the tenors, first as an augmented 5th on the triad of F, and afterwards as a leading note in the dominant harmony of D minor. We also object to the triplets on the words "Where the," which do not seem in character with the rest of the song.

Flowers. Four-part Song. Words from the German of Wilmsen, by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, M.A. Music by J. Frederick Bridge, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

MR. BRIDGE has the credit of having written a charming Part-song to some charming words: indeed, we do not know when a more musician-like and purely-voiced composition has come before us. The melody is sympathetic with the poetry throughout; and all the effects are obtained by the most legitimate means. We especially like the unison phrase in the relative minor, with the close on the dominant; the return to the key, on the words "Till when storms are past," being particularly effective. We shall be glad again to welcome this composer.

Where Wavelets rippled gaily. (Aux bords de la Durance.) Quartett, or Chorus ad lib. The English words by Henry Dulcken, Ph.D.

We'll gaily sing and play. (Cantiam, cantiam, danziam.) Quartett for four solo voices, or Chorus ad lib. The words translated from the Italian of M. Maggioni, by Henry Dulcken, Ph.D.

The music composed and arranged by Ciro Pinsuti.

SIGNOR PINSUTI'S name stands so high as a composer of part-music, that it may perhaps cause some surprise to see that portions of these two vocal pieces are "arranged" by him. The fact is, that in the course of these compositions he has woven in two popular melodies, but so naturally and ingeniously has he effected this that the songs cannot fail to delight even a critical audience. It may be imagined that the intrinsic merit of the original parts of these Quartetts is sufficient to interest the listeners; so that, unlike most works of this class, their attraction will not rest alone upon the beauty of the introduced airs. In No. 1, we have the "Blue Bells of Scotland;" and in No. 2, the "Last Rose of Summer." The treatment of these two subjects is the same in both. After an Introduction for the four voices, the melody is sung as a solo, and afterwards in full harmony, the opening portion re-appearing to divide the two verses of the song. The first air seems to form part of the composition, and is given to the tenor voice; but the "Last Rose of Summer" is introduced by the treble as a song "from Erin's Isle," the chorus, before joining in the harmony, being supposed to listen to the solo. We should very much like to hear these compositions sung by a Choral Society: the novelty of their form, and their musician-like treatment, would, we are certain, ensure for them a decided success.

LAMBORN COCK.

Former days. Song. The words by Marwood Tucker (from the French of Philippe Théolien.) Music by John Hullah.

It is quite refreshing, amongst the mass of commonplace effusions daily forwarded for notice, to find so original and thoroughly unconventional a song as the one before us. The melody, although most attractive and catching even to untutored ears, is by no means the only merit in this composition, for the accentuation of the words—a qualification too rare in modern vocal works to pass without acknowledgment—shows that the composer has been earnest in his work throughout. As an example of this—although we might cite many others—let us take the syncopation on the two words "Sitting to-day," which is a perfect specimen of vocal accent; and we should mention that in the other verses, where such syncopation is not demanded, the passage is appropriately altered. Amongst the many points in this song which call for unqualified praise we may refer to the sympathetic treatment of the accompaniment in the first four bars of the voice part, the unexpected modulation into F minor, on the words "dost ever sigh," and the whole of the following phrase marked "Cres. e accel." We know full well how the attention of public vocalists in the present day is drawn away from the consideration of the abstract worth of vocal works by other matters which need not here be mentioned; but the task of the reviewer would be much more pleasurable could he believe that his earnest recommendation of a really good composition like the one under notice, would influence those who have the talent and power to ensure its popularity.

CHAPPELL AND CO.

Concert Fantasia. No. 1 of Original Compositions for the Organ, by William Spark, Mus. Doc.

THIS is a fruit of the author's long experience and complete knowledge of his instrument. It displays effectively the wide resources of the organ; and it is so well fitted to the mechanical means of the player, that it will be received with pleasure by those who have mastered technical difficulties, and who wish for music wherein they may show their acquirements. It is in the unwonted key of B, and needs, therefore, an instrument tuned according to equal temperament—a condition against which some of the best judges have argued, but in vain. An introductory Adagio opens the Fantasia in a majestic manner. The Moderato that follows this has a most pleasing theme, and the modulations through which it is developed, though certainly extreme, and perhaps diffuse, are highly effective. An Andante, in G, presents a capital relief in its change of measure, as well as of key, in its employment of a different set of stops from the foregoing, and in its graceful melody. A Fugue follows, in which the key of B is resumed, and which is perhaps the best portion of the piece. It is curiously misnamed "Finale"—miscalled, for a Moderato succeeds to it, and constitutes the true conclusion. This last is a resumption of the previous movement with the same title, and it gives agreeable unity to the whole, to come back for the finish to an idea that has left a good impression.

DUFF AND STEWART.

The Vocal Music in Balfe's Grand Opera, "Il Talismano." Libretto by Arthur Matthison. The Italian translation by Signor Zaffira.

OUR opinion of Balfe's posthumous work has been already freely expressed, upon its production at Her Majesty's Opera; and a closer examination of the principal vocal pieces than is possible on a first hearing has in no respect altered our estimate of their merit. There is tune in many of them, but this is often of the most commonplace kind; indeed, the songs "Radiant Splendours" (the Rondeau so brilliantly sung by Madame Nilsson), "Oh! who shall sing the rapture," "On balmy wing," and even the "Rose Song"—destined, no doubt, to achieve a drawing-room popularity—would be simply passed over as unworthy of serious attention, were they sent for review as new publications by an unknown composer. The Ladies' Chorus, "Weary hours" (here appearing as a duet), commences so exactly like the well-known "Ten little niggers," as to suggest the banjo accompaniment; and "A song to Merrie England" (arranged as a glee for male voices) is a mere piece of smooth and innocent vocal harmony. Decidedly the best song in the Opera is "The Ladie Eveline," pure melody and musician-like treatment distinguishing this unpretending little composition throughout. The commencement, in A minor, and the happy changes of time and key, prove that the composer has endeavoured to express the words like a true artist; and the song, not being so intimately connected with the incidents of the Opera as some others, will be found in every respect admirably adapted for amateurs. Edith's prayer, too, "Placida notte," has an elegant, flowing subject, in 12-8 rhythm, which, if not strikingly original, is at least thoroughly sympathetic with the verses; and the Romance (sung with so much effect by Madlle. Marie Roze), "Beneath a portal," although merely a melodious dance-tune, will be a real boon to vocalists who can master with ease the constant changes of key. The duet, "Keep the ring," is full of true dramatic effect, and never fails to excite the audience on each representation of the work; but whether it might prove a success with smaller singers than Madame Nilsson and Signor Campanini we cannot say; certain, however, it is that the voice-parts are well written, and the duet contains much spontaneous melody of the true Balfe type. We may say, however, that the published version of this composition is considerably abridged from the original, which would certainly be too long for private performance.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER AND CO.

Forsake me not. Anthem composed by Ernst Helmer.

The formality, but not the impressiveness, of a psalm-tune marks the first movement of this piece. The treble solo that follows is disfigured, firstly, by the 7th and 8th of C both descending to the fifth of D, in bars 2 and 3 of the voice part, an ill effect, against which writers should for ever be careful; and secondly, by the extension of the first vocal phrase to nine bars, there being no parallel phrase of like length; and it has little charm to atone for these irregularities. The consecutive 4ths between bass and treble, in bars 3 and 4, score three, page 8, are a specimen of the unmusicianship that distinguishes the last Chorus. We are warned, in all books on musical theory, against the abomination of two 5ths in succession, and two 8ths are as commonly forbidden; some works, however, say nothing of the impropriety of successive 7ths or 2nds, or 4ths with the bass, but their effect is not less objectionable because it is less forbidden. The whole of this composition seems to have been calculated rather than inspired, save where it has been miscalculated in such places as we have cited.

SCHOTT AND CO.

O Salutaris, pour Voix de Basse ou de Baryton, avec Accompagnement d'Orgue, par Alex. Guilmant, Op. 37.

This is admirably effective for the voice, and the organ accompaniment adds much to its interest. It is far from charmless as music, and is well worth the attention of any singer who may have the opportunity to introduce it.

R. LIMPUS.

I will always give thanks. Anthem by Haydn Keeton.

This work gained the prize of the College of Organists, in 1873, and we are happy to endorse the opinion of the umpires. It evinces a strong musical feeling, and a fluency of production, that, if well cultivated, should lead the possessor to high distinction. The first Allegro is spontaneous, frank, and hearty. One passage in it is open to objection, and we state this with the kindest intention, aiming to show the author that, with all his strong natural talent, he has still something to learn, and owning the while that the incident in question is but a blemish on a fair surface. It is on page 3, where the phrase, beginning in C, modulates first into G, then into E minor, and returns into G in the very same bar; then, this key of G being clearly confirmed, there is a chord of the dominant 7th upon B, which is resolved upon a chord of C—a progression that would be beyond question were E minor the prevailing key, but that is out of the question in the key of G. We are aware that this progression may be defended on the ground of precedent, but the repetition of a bad thing does not make it into a good one, and like employment to this of the chord of the dominant of E in the midst of a phrase that is in the key of G, has been so often made, that it is now time to protest against it. The key of E minor having occurred in the phrase, makes this use of its most characteristic harmony still more ambiguous than it would else be, and suggests the thought that the author could not determine in which of the two keys, G or E, his phrase really was. The passage for the voices in unison with harmony for the organ, to the words beginning "O praise the Lord with me," contrasts well with what surrounds it. The middle movement, "O taste and see," for soprano solo is, without reserve, beautiful. A well-sustained melody, lying effectively for the voice, and accompanied with harmony that is most sweet, and never mawkish, captivates the attention at once, and holds it till the charming song is closed. The expression is faithful to the words, meek and tender, and almost irresistibly persuasive. The final Chorus repeats a greater portion of the first, and towards the end it branches out with some brilliancy into a strange key, returning whence by powerful but natural progressions, it closes with an expansion of that earnest, joyful spirit with which the composition opens. Mr. Keeton, be it known to his honour, and that of those who elected him to his important office, is organist of Peterborough Cathedral, and it is well that such an artist holds such a responsibility.

COOPER, PLYMOUTH.

"O God, my heart is ready" (The 108th Psalm.) A Sacred Cantata. Composed by John Hele, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Op. 2.

THIS is a work of important pretension, and has strongly the air of having been written as an exercise for the Bachelor's degree, of which, the two choral numbers for five voices, and the general emulation of fugalism, are indications. It comprises an instrumental Introduction and Fugue; a Chorus, "O God, my heart is ready;" a soprano Air, "Awake thou;" a Chorus in fugal form, for four voices, "I will give thanks;" a bass Air, "Set up Thyself;" a tenor Recitative, "Hast Thou forgotten me;" a Solo for the same voice, intermixed with Chorus, "O, help us;" and a final Chorus, "Through God we shall do great acts." Thus we have the whole of the 108th Psalm, except that passage only which refers circumstantially to the history of Judah, and names the nations with which the Hebrews were in contention. It is a weakness in the outline of the whole, that the several pieces, after the first three, follow according to the order of flats—in the keys of C, of F, of B flat, and of E flat—namely, the flats are then withdrawn in the verse succession—by three, by two, and by one, from movement to movement. They who wish to learn the order of keys, look rather into an instruction book than into a cantata; and they who have no desire to combine instruction with amusement, become wearied by this purely technical exposition. It is a poverty in the plan of the fugues, that there is in each a full-close in the key of the dominant, instead of a half-close in the key of the tonic, preceding a dominant pedal. It is far away from the purpose which best precedent has established, to have anything so conclusive as the points to which we refer, prior to the termination of a piece in this form; and the efficacy of the rule is strongly illustrated in the cases under notice, where the effect of the fresh start upon the pedal bass is in a high degree prolix. The composer has not done himself justice in his published copy, for it abounds with engraver's errors, such as it should have been his care to correct; and some of these (in page 2, bars 4 and 5, for instance) are of such a nature as to obscure the sense. The work was written for the orchestra, and the accompaniment is effectively arranged for the pianoforte. It is dedicated to the Bishop of Exeter, and is graced with an extraordinarily long list of distinguished subscribers.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE OFFERTORY AND THE ORGANISTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Perhaps it may not be wise for me to make the complaint contained in this letter to a musical journal, but as those of whom I complain probably number many amongst your readers, I may (if you do not object) get a hearing from them through your columns. What I desire to call attention to is an abuse of long standing, which seems to me to be rather on the increase than otherwise. I refer to the light and trifling style of music performed by many organists during the offertory in divine service. Surely it is not seemly or becoming upon such an occasion, when a Christian congregation is assembled in the house of God for His worship on the Lord's day, that an organist should seize the opportunity to show himself off upon the instrument provided for the purposes of public worship. Is there not an abundance of beautiful sacred music, much of it associated with devotional words, which might be played on such occasions, without having all solemnity and good taste outraged by the performance of such pieces as a young lady might play on the piano at an evening party, or a towering fantasia with roudades and extravagances that startle the congregation by their singularity? The truth is that voluntaries at all during the offertory are a breach of the rubric, which has prescribed certain words from Scripture to be read during that period; but if people will not endure these sound words, let us have some music of a devotional or solemn character, and not trifling musical flippancies that are only fit for a concert-room. The clergy are often so ignorant of musical matters that they do not notice these things, but I think some one ought to have control over the self-assertion of certain organists, who would make the house of God a stage on which to exhibit their powers of performance. How different to the feelings elicited by such music are those raised by hearing compositions like "If with all your hearts," "He shall feed His flock," or "Rest in the Lord," played in Church, when the sweet promises of the Scripture are brought to the recollection of the hearer and sung into his ear as it were. Hoping you will allow this remonstrance to reach, through your columns, some of those of whom I complain,

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,
MUSICUS.

DR. DYKES'S ANTHEM, "THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I am far too conscious of the use of honest criticism, however unfavourable, ever to object to be exposed to its ordeal. We all of us learn by our mistakes: and I trust I shall never be foolish enough not to be thankful to any critic who will take the trouble to point out my own. But I object to captious criticism, and to fault-finding for its own sake. I trust, therefore, you will kindly allow me to offer a few words in reply to the critic who did me the honour to review my Anthem, "The Lord is my Shepherd," last month. Although I must thank him for his flattering words concerning myself personally, he yet plainly considers that because I am a parson I have no business to write music; and that, if I do, I must be true to my cloth and make a suitable number of "clerical errors." He sets himself therefore to detect and point out these.

Had he satisfied himself with mere generalities, I should have had nothing to say. But as he has entered into particulars and adduced instances of my want of "artistry," I hope I may without impropriety refer to these instances. One of them I cannot discover as he does not furnish the reference. But as regards the others, I confidently appeal to any sound musician, I care not whom, even to my critic himself, in his normal state, whether there is one single point really deserving of reprehension in all that he has adduced, and whether the objections themselves do not rather indicate a determination to find fault somewhere. I ask him if he honestly thinks that I should improve my composition by altering it in any of the passages against which he has taken exception? Let me with the utmost brevity glance at these.

(i) What thoughtful composer, e.g., would for a moment be scared by fear of "false relation" into altering the alto E (page 3, score 2, bar 2), because the bass, immediately afterwards, taking up a subject which is repeated in sequence has an E♭?

(2) As for the alleged error at page 8, score 1, bar 1, I can only express my amazement at an intelligent critic seriously drawing attention to it as an error. I invite examination.

(3) My critic objects to the word "Righteousness" being sung in G; but he does not tell us why.

(4) He complains of the "extraordinary length" of the composition. Well, there is a vast amount of short scrappy writing for the Church now-a-days. The Psalm is one of singular devotional and poetical beauty. Why should I not treat it somewhat fully?

(5) He complains that the voice-part in the bass solo, No. 3, lies low for the voice. Surely he must see that there is a meaning in this. After the "green pastures" and "still waters" of the tenor solo, No. 2, we come to the "Valley of the Shadow of Death." Does not the poetic contrast seem to demand that the sense of gloom should find expression in the range and character of the music? As the song progresses the feeling of confidence in the Heavenly Guide overcomes the first sense of horror, and the voice-part rises to a pitch quite high enough for any bass singer to render with comfort and effect.

(6) My watchful critic proceeds to remark on the "strangely extraneous" key of the next movement (the quintett and chorus, No. 4.) Let me explain. The pastoral chorus and tenor solo, Nos. 1 and 2, are in F. Then we come to the "Dark Valley," in F minor; the song ending in the relative major A♭. Suddenly this A♭ becomes G♯; and we find ourselves out of the Valley. We are in the bright key of E. I do think my worthy censor must be strangely insensible to musical effect not to feel the effect of the return to light and fresh air produced by this transition of key. But he does feel it; for, spite of himself, he lays aside for a moment his severe aspect and begins to smile. This is the only movement in which he has condescended to bestow a word of commendation.

(7) He soon becomes grim again; for he now objects, that there is "little skill in the development" of the Eucharistic melody, "Adoro Te devote," which I here introduce. I merely answer, that it formed no part of my purpose to "develope" it. I simply introduced it (to borrow a word from my own profession) for exegetical purposes, and in order to suggest the Eucharistic association of the words, "Thou shalt prepare a Table," &c., which, from the earliest times, has been recognised. I should add that the joyous and mirthful character of the music is suggested by the "Calix inebrians" of the Vulgate.

(8) As for the "violent transition" into the key of F, "which has no warrant in the words," I have simply to reply that the transition in question does not require "warrant from the words," inasmuch it is not associated with any words at all. The case is merely this, that the movement in E concludes with a short postlude or symphony, returning, by a modulation very familiar to all lovers of Spohr, to the original key of F, the key of the final chorus.

(9) This last movement, he says, is "long and laboured." Well, it is rather long. The words are doubly associated with the idea of length: they tell of earthly perpetuity, and heavenly perpetuity. We have first, "Thy loving kindness and tender mercy shall follow me all the days of my life." Then we have, "And I will dwell in the House of the Lord for ever." But I do not consider the chorus "laboured," except in so far that it was a labour of love to write it.

But my critic has not let me off yet. We have got to the concluding fugue, "And I will dwell," &c.

(10) In the first place he will only condescend to describe this as a "fugue, so to speak."

(11) In the next place, he says that it is wrongly constructed. Here I must join issue with him. He pronounces that the fugue "must" follow the course of a tonal fugue. I have chosen to treat its three subjects strictly after the manner of a real fugue. If he does not like it, I am sorry: I do.

(12) Then he says that "the further conduct of the fugue is unskilful." I reply, that a fugue may be treated in an infinite variety of ways. My one object was to treat it in the way best calculated to do justice to the beautiful words, without caring to introduce into it the entire family of regulation puzzles, by way of showing off my own ingenuity. I simply endeavoured so to construct this final chorus as to give due emphasis and expression to its two noble themes—the unfailing Mercy which is to follow us (1) in this life, and (2) in the Life to come; and then to conclude all by a return to the original theme—the care of the Good Shepherd, to whose loving guidance we owe all.

I leave my Anthem to its fate. Experience has taught me that if music is good and genuine, and written from the heart, no amount of adverse criticism will, in the long run, injure it; and that if it is worthless, no amount of puffing will make it live. I wrote a long Anthem some years ago, "These are they which came out of great tribulation," the only critique of which I ever saw was of a most contemptuous character. The Anthem has survived the criticism, and I am not without hopes that the disparaging remarks of my present and more generous censor will not prove the death of "The Lord is my Shepherd."

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

JOHN B. DYKES.

S. Oswald's Vicarage, Durham,
July 17, 1874.

[It would evince the captiousness and fault-finding for its own sake, of which the above complains, to animadvert on the twelve objections Dr. Dykes makes to the criticism, each of which may suggest, to impartial readers, its own reply. If, in the article in question, no instances had been adduced and the remarks had been confined to generalities, the unkindly feeling might have been inferred which Dr. Dykes assumes to have prompted them. Let him be assured that the opinion those instances justify has been formed in good faith, and expressed with the intention of courtesy to the composer and respect for the talent he has proved in other musical productions.—THE WRITER OF THE REVIEW.]

DR. VERRINDER'S RUSSIAN HYMN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—My Russian Hymn, with variations for the organ, is not a thing of yesterday: it has been received with favour by our most distinguished organists, and has been played on some of the largest instruments in America. The late Mr. Chorley spoke of the melody as "The Grand Russian tune." I took not such high ground, but thought it sufficiently good for my purpose. I am not frightened at your bogie of two consecutive 4ths. I differ from you, with all respect, both as regards the use of full harmony, and also lines to indicate the progression of parts in organ music; they assist the eye if not the ear, and are intended to serve no other purpose. Wholesome criticism is good, but when Doctors differ both sides ought in fairness to be heard, and I might quote from letters received from the most eminent musicians of our day, whose views are entirely at variance with your opinions. In the end you become pathetic. I will be more practical, and express a hope that you may shortly have leisure to make a further acquaintance with my organ-piece than merely the introduction, 4th variation, and finale, or else write something better on the same theme.

Faithfully yours,

C. G. VERRINDER, Mus. Doc.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

•• Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

GILLINGHAM.—The Parish Church organ, which was re-opened on Thursday, June 25, was built by Messrs. Robson in 1847. It was celebrated for its diapasons throughout the district, but on account of alterations made in the church choir, it was deemed expedient to enlarge it. The work was entrusted to Messrs. Bevington and Sons, Soho, London, who have preserved the mellow tone of the old instrument and added an effective pedal-organ of open 16 feet pipes, and a wald-flute in the swell, besides carrying the swell organ down to C.C. The music of the opening services was conducted by Mr. James Ley, the newly appointed organist of Gillingham. Mr. Harper Kearton (Vicar Choral of Wells Cathedral) played the voluntaries before and after each service, and effectively displayed the capabilities of the instrument. Offertories were made after both services.

MANCHESTER.—On the 18th ult., at the Cathedral School, Todd Street, two gratifying presentations were made to Mr. J. F. Bridge, Mus. Doc. of Oxford University, and organist of Manchester Cathedral, in the presence of a large audience. The first consisted of a hood of a Doctor of Music, given by the choir and others connected with the Cathedral, together with a handsomely-framed illuminated address. The second was a handsomely bound edition of Dr. Burney's History of Music, in four volumes, given by the Bishop, Dean, and Canons of the Cathedral, the inscription on the fly-leaf being signed by the donor. The chair was occupied by Alderman Lamb, and the gifts were presented in fitting terms by the Bishop of Manchester and the Rev. S. Smith, precentor. Dr. Bridge suitably acknowledged the presentations, and a musical entertainment followed.

PLYMOUTH.—The opening of the new Guildhall, which is fixed for the 13th inst., will be signalled not only by an interesting ceremony during that day, but by a musical Festival on the mornings and evenings of the two following days. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has consented formally to open the building, after which there will be a déjeuner in the Great Hall, followed in the evening by illuminations and fireworks. The music to be performed at the Festival will include Mendelssohn's Elijah and Haydn's Creation, the band and chorus being composed of the members of the Plymouth Vocal Association, under the able direction of Mr. F. N. Lohr.

WINCHESTER.—On Thursday, the 16th ult., two services were held at the Cathedral in aid of the Choir Benevolent Fund, by permission of the Very Rev. the Dean, and the Rev. the Chapter. The singers were selected from the choirs of the Chapel Royal, the Royal Chapel of St. George, Windsor, St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, the Cathedrals of Winchester, Chichester, Lincoln, Salisbury, and the Colleges of Eton and Winchester. Dr. G. B. Arnold was organist, and played in his well-known masterly manner; and after each service, a collection was made in aid of the funds of the Society. The morning service commenced at eleven o'clock, the service being from Tallis and Elvey, and the Te Deum and Benedictus, Gibbons in F. The anthem, Goss's "Praise the Lord," was exceedingly well given. The quartet, "O pray for the peace of Jerusalem," was beautifully sung by Alldridge (New College), Frost (St. Paul's), Hunt (Windsor), and Horscroft (St. Paul's). In the evening, the opening anthem, Purcell's "O sing unto the Lord," went exceedingly well, the quartet being taken by Cooke (Westminster), Barnby (St. Paul's), Carter (Westminster), and Distin (Lincoln); the duet for treble and alto was taken by Cooke and Barnby, and the concluding bass solo and chorus was more than usually well sung by Distin. Certainly one of the most successful anthems of the service was that by Dr. Arnold, "Let the righteous be glad." In the bass solo, Mr. Briggs, of Windsor, fairly delighted the congregation, and nothing could exceed the pureness of delivery of Mr. Whitehouse (Windsor) in the treble solo, "The Lord was ready to save me." After the sermon came Mendelssohn's "My God, my God," opening with a tenor recitative, sung by Dyson (Windsor) and chorus. The bass solo was successfully rendered by Briggs, and the quartet, "I will declare Thy Name," was taken by Cooke, Adams (Windsor), Dyson and Distin. The treble and tenor solos, "The meek shall eat," &c., by Messrs. Cooke and Dyson, went exceedingly well. Byrd's anthem, "Bow down Thine ear," followed, and was succeeded by Wesley's well-known "Ascribe unto the Lord," in which the recit. for alto, tenor, and bass was well given by Messrs. Cooke, Whitehouse, and Alldridge. The chorus, "As for the gods of the heathen," was excellently sung. The trio, "They that make them," was most artistically rendered by Messrs. Large, Carter, and Beckett (Windsor); and the chorus, "The Lord hath been mindful of us," was also highly successful. The collections amounted to £74 15s. 1rd.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. G. F. Tendall, Mus. Bac., Oxon., organist to the Duke of Buccleuch, K.G.—Mr. Edward Cook, organist and choirmaster to St. Stephen's, Bristol.—Mr. K. G. Westley to St. Michael's, Southampton.—Mr. J. A. Hudlam, to Oak-street Chapel, Heeley, Sheffield.—Mr. T. J. Greaves, to the New Wesleyan Church, Highbury New Park.

THE PEOPLE'S HARMONIUM (Registered);

Solid dark Oak Case, by Alexandre. Price FOUR GUINEAS.

THIS Harmonium has been designed to meet the demand made for a small instrument of good quality of tone, at a price within the reach of all. By the aid of newly-invented machinery, Messrs. ALEXANDRE have been enabled to make this a marvel of cheapness, elegance, and good quality of tone. It will be found invaluable for small class-room, cottage, library, or Choral Societies.

THE PEOPLE'S HARMONIUM (Registered);

With Celeste stop; Compass, Four Octaves. Price FIVE GUINEAS.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, SOLE AGENTS.

|--|---------|---|
| 1. HE SHALL FEED HIS FLOCK. | Handel. | 8. WISE MEN FLATTERING. |
| 2. HE WAS DESPISED. | Do. | 9. WHAT THOUGH I TRACE; and PIOUS ORGIES. |
| 3. ANGELS, EVER BRIGHT AND FAIR. | Do. | 10. THY REBUKE HATH BROKEN HIS HEART. |
| 4. HOW BEAUTIFUL ARE THE FEET. | Do. | 11. HE WAS CUT OFF OUT OF THE LAND OF |
| 5. IF GOD BE FOR US. | Do. | THE LIVING. |
| 6. TYRANNIC LOVE. | Do. | 12. I KNOW THAT MY REDEEMER LIVETH. |
| 7. LORD, REMEMBER DAVID; and HOLY, HOLY. | | To be continued. |

In publishing the above, Chappell and Co. feel they are supplying a want long felt by Amateur Organists, as this work removes the difficulty amateurs experience in performing Handel's songs from the scores. Being published in three lines, the solo parts and accompaniments are easily and effectively distributed.

The words of each song being printed upon the top line will be found of great service to the performer in giving proper expression to the songs.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN.

By WILLIAM SPARK, Mus. D., Organist of the Town Hall, Leeds.

No. 1, CONCERT FANTASIA IN B MAJOR. PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

ADAGIO—MODERATO—ANDANTE—FINALE.

"THIS, the first of a series of original compositions from the fertile genius of this accomplished musician, is well adapted for concert performance. The Fantasia will be an acceptable addition to the repertory of organ performers."—Western Times.

"The piece is well adapted for its purpose, namely, to appear upon the programme of a concert, or recital, for it at the same time combines legitimate and good effect with facility of performance."—Musical Standard.

NEW WORK FOR SINGING CLASSES.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS.

For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass.

The present collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the Favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The Words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small classes.

HARMONIUMS! HARMONIUMS!
W. HATTERSLEY'S
CELEBRATED ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS, MANUFACTURED ONLY BY
W. HATTERSLEY and Co., 10 and 12, Bow-street, Sheffield.
These Instruments are superior to all other Makers, English or Foreign.

Every Instrument voiced and thoroughly tested before leaving the establishment by Mr. Wm. Hattersley.

These Instruments are manufactured from the very best, well-seasoned Materials, in double veneered cases, and upon improved principles, and contain all the latest improvements invented by W.
Hattersley, and although the cost of their construction is thereby considerably increased, the fact of their being manufactured for their own retail sale only (and not for the trade), enables them to sell their Harmoniums at the same price as the ordinary and much inferior
Harmoniums sold by other music dealers.

Books of Designs and above 200 testimonials free by post or upon application.

Special attention is called to the DRAWING-ROOM MODELS, as being the most perfect Harmoniums ever manufactured, having a full Organ Tone.

CAUTION.—Being in London, and finding that a number of imitations of my now celebrated SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS are offered to the public as the genuine Instruments, I think it due to the Musical Profession, Amateurs, and the Trade, to make the following statement:—Nine years ago, after much thought and labour, I succeeded in completing the short Grand, adopting the cross-string principle of Steinway, to lessen the size, and making many improvements in the sound-board and action; and it is well known to the musical world of Germany that I was the originator of these Pianos. Since that time additional improvements have been effected, the sale has gradually increased, and at the present time I have more than 250 workmen engaged exclusively on their manufacture. The acknowledged superiority of these Pianofortes to any other description of the same size has caused them to be closely imitated by various makers; and, in one instance, the name "Beethoven Grand," which I originally used as a distinctive trade mark, but have since abandoned, has been adopted; and with unexampled modesty, the public is now invited to accept the copy as the original, and to consider the genuine as spurious.
Among the numerous testimonials I have received (including five medals), I may be permitted to mention that his Majesty the King of Saxony, who takes great interest in Art and Manufactures, and is in addition an excellent musician, honoured my manufactory with a visit on February 25th last, and was pleased to express his entire satisfaction.
The Depot for my Pianofortes in London is at Mr. FLAVELL'S, 26, North Audley Street, W., where they may be seen in great variety.—

THE MUSICAL TIMES,

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

SEPTEMBER 1, 1874.

THE LONDON MUSICAL SEASON.

BY HENRY C. LUNN.

IN reviewing the principal events of a London musical season, it would of course be impossible to ignore the claims of the two Italian Opera-houses to a large share of our attention were we merely to be guided by the position assigned to them by the fashionable world. But to those who watch year by year their deteriorating influence upon the taste of the public; who see a few petted vocalists gradually, but surely, sapping the foundations of real art, and who believe that until a musical Cromwell can be found to pull down the tyrannical power of these self-willed monarchs, there will be but small hope for the lyric stage, it can matter but little what round of well-worn works has been gone through during the season, what triumphs have been achieved by the gifted but pampered favourites of the occupants of boxes and stalls, or what quasi failures and successes have been made by the new aspirants for public patronage, whose only desire is that they may acquire a sufficiently high position to enable them to imitate the aimless frivolity of the "Queens of Song" who have preceded them. That we especially direct our observations to the prime donne of an Operatic company by no means proves that we are not alive to the pretensions of the principal male vocalists; but facts are stubborn things; and, recurring to the past season at Her Majesty's Opera, we may reasonably ask how it is that, without any public announcement of such a step on the part of the management, the price of stalls is invariably raised, "when Madame Christine Nilsson sings;" and that if such a policy is to be pursued, why a sliding-scale is not adopted when the other great vocalists exhibit their talents. Could not something, for instance, be added to the usual tariff to hear Madlle. Titiens (unquestionably the greatest artist in the establishment) and would not the singing of Madame Trebelli-Bettini or of Signor Campanini command a few shillings extra? Again, why are such Operas as "Il Talismano" and others we could name, pushed forward night after night, whilst "Don Giovanni" is played but once, and that on an extra night, for the benefit of the Lessee? It could not be because Mozart's work does not attract, for the house was crowded in every part; but Madame Nilsson—be it known—"created" the character of Edith Plantagenet, in Balfe's Opera, and to throw it aside after such an act of condescension might be considered a confession of weakness in her powers of judgment, and therefore the work must be kept in the bills, although to the subscribers it may have seemed too much like the monster "created" by Frankenstein. At the Royal Italian Opera "Il Guarany," "Luisa Miller," and "Crispino e la Comare" can scarcely be considered Operas to "draw," and yet we find them in the répertoire of the season. We are told that the Lessees of Opera-houses must consult the taste of their subscribers, but we have endeavoured to prove that in reality they consult the taste of their singers. If the supporters of these establishments please to be thus ruled, we have nothing to say; but whilst fanatics are nightly bowing before their idols in the fashionable temples, the worship of the true art will unquestion-ably grow up outside their walls; and though toleration of creeds is one great proof of civilization, there are few persons, we think, who do not long for the time when a belief in the real mission of music shall universally prevail.

Our task of recapitulating the principal features of the past Operatic season will this year be unusually light. At Her Majesty's Opera Madame Nilsson has reigned almost supreme, even "Ernani" and "Roberto Devereux," in both which Operas Madlle. Titiens was, according to the prospectus, to sustain the principal characters, having been set aside in order that the favoured prima donna might be heard in such parts as Leonora, in "Il Trovatore," and Valentina, in "Les Huguenots." Of Madlle. Lodi, who was unfortunately compelled, by illness, to quit the establishment, we must speak in most favourable terms, and cannot dismiss her name without expressing a hope that she may return to us with renewed health and strength next season. Madlle. Singelli may be said to have achieved a decided success, her pure soprano voice and facile execution, in spite of a certain coldness of manner, securing for her a large circle of admirers. From the new tenors, Signor Gillandi and M. Achard must be selected as having obtained a high, but not the highest position; and Signor De Reschi, Signor Galassi, Herr Behrens, and Signor Perkins (the last named gentleman having done as much as he can to Italianise his name, according to our Operatic requirements) have added much strength to the department of baritones and basses. The merits of Balfe's Opera "Il Talismano" have already been fully discussed in these columns; and we have little doubt that Time will endorse the justice of the verdict we have pronounced. In his opening prospectus the Lessee says "He trusts that neither the lovers of 'classical' nor of 'popular' works will have cause to complain of the result." We know not whether the upholders of the "popular" school have reason to be satisfied; but as lovers of the "classical," we desire to place upon record that we do complain.

The season at the Royal Italian Opera has been even more barren than that at the rival establishment; for, with the exception of the production of Verdi's "Luisa Miller," we have had nothing beyond the usual works, of which any person not belonging to the class of "Operatic subscribers" would have been weary years ago. The Lord Mayor's "Queen of Song," Madame Patti, has however been as prominently put forward as she was at the civic banquet to the representatives of "literature and art;" and, as the majority of people go to hear singers and not Operas, the maxim of administering to the "greatest happiness of the greatest number" has been steadily adhered to. We may speak in high terms of Madame Vilda, although both this lady and the tenor, Signor Marini (who may yet live to discover that shouting is not singing), have been heard in this country some years ago. Signor Bolis and Signor Piazza have also succeeded in establishing a fame as reliable tenors, a department which has been occupied for whole seasons by far worse singers. Madlle. Albani has materially increased her reputation this year, and Madlle. Marimon has at least sustained the position she occupied at Her Majesty's Opera. The subject of "pitch," which has recently been so extensively discussed, appears to have unsettled the minds of our Operatic Conductors, without bringing them to any definite conclusion on the matter. Meantime some singers have decided the question by singing at the pitch most convenient to them; and, although at Covent Garden a recognised standard has prevailed during the season, at Drury Lane the poor chorus-singers have been so at the mercy of the principal vocalists that they were compelled to enquire what was to be the pitch for the evening; and if disastrous results followed, we should hardly, therefore, throw the blame on them. Surely some definite system should obtain, for it can scarcely be expected that an Opera can be sung in tune whilst the pitch is to be settled by the prima donna for the night.

Giving precedence, by virtue of its age, to the Philharmonic Society, we must express a hope that it will not rely too securely upon its former position in the world of art. True it is that it has done much for the progress of the highest class music in this country; but to maintain a reputation is as hard a task as to acquire one; and all who have the interest of this Institution at heart must see that it is too apt to ignore the necessity of any reform in its management. To take solid ground in the present day it must lead, instead of follow, public taste; and we are only echoing a widely spread opinion when we say that the orchestra needs renovation if the Society would compete successfully with others that are growing up around it. Mr. Cusins, the Conductor, is too good a musician not to be aware of this fact; and although he has satisfactorily led his forces to the end of the session, it behoves him, like an efficient General, to make the best use of the time which must elapse before they are again called into active service.

The Crystal Palace has been unusually active during the year, and Mr. Manns deserves the utmost credit for his unwearied exertions in the cause of good music. To Sydenham, indeed, we are now accustomed to look for novelty in orchestral and choral works; and foreign artists of reputation seem to consider an appearance at the now celebrated Saturday concerts a positive necessity before quitting our shores. The illustrations of National music were a severe test; for, like all public exhibitions of the progress of various countries, they must show weakness as well as strength: a mere display of wealth may blind us to the presence of poverty, but when both have to be dragged forward into the light of day, the result is at least hazardous. What was done, however, was well done; and if more attention were paid to the solo vocal music; or, better still perhaps, if the choir were placed under vigorous training, and only pieces requiring chorus and orchestra given, the concerts would be everything that could be desired. The Handel Festival, too, must not be forgotten in the record of important musical events. Upon the tampering with the scores of a composer, who unquestionably knew best what he meant, we have already spoken freely in our report upon the performance. We hold our opinion even upon the question of "additional accompaniments;" but, passing over this matter, we cannot admit that putting a few bars of symphony where Handel has purposely commenced with the voices, and altering his own treatment of various instruments can be justified, especially when such innovation is not previously submitted to a competent jury of musicians. The success of the Festival, however, is a proof of the steady worship of the great master's works in England; and we sincerely hope that we may look forward with confidence to the periodical recurrence of a musical demonstration which reflects so much credit upon the Sacred Harmonic Society, and its talented and indefatigable Conductor.

The steady improvement of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, under the systematic training of Mr. Barnby, has been sufficiently evinced by the execution of the works given during the past season. Handel's "Theodora," and Bach's "Christmas Oratorio," are compositions demanding not only the faculty of singing the right notes, and a blind obedience to the Conductor, but a loyalty to the cause of high class music which, with so large a body of executants, is not always to be relied upon; and the thanks of all, therefore, are due for so efficient a presentation of two specimens of their composers' genius hitherto almost unknown in this country. The Oratorios in Holy week, too, have been again given, Bach's "St. Matthew Passion Music" once more asserting the supremacy of its power to move the hearts of thousands to a due appreciation of the solemnity of the occasion, and increasing our wonder that such a work should for years have slumbered in obscurity.

The Sacred Harmonic Society, by the production of Mr. G. A. Macfarren's Oratorio, "St. John the Baptist," for the first time in London, has proved that it has at least its moments of wakefulness; and we believe that we speak the feelings of the subscribers when we say that a performance of this work next season will be anxiously looked for. May we also hint that if a little of that spirit which prompted the resuscitation of "Israel in Egypt" many years ago should be still left in the Society, it may be exercised in making the public acquainted with several sacred compositions the excessive beauties of which have long been the admiration of students.

Of the objects of the "British Orchestral Society" we have before spoken; and see no reason, from the experience of the past season, to modify our opinion. If better concerts are given by this Association than can be found elsewhere, there will be no occasion to complain of want of patronage; but that the public cares one bit where the members of the orchestra were born we take leave to doubt, and indeed should be extremely sorry if it could be proved that such a feeling existed. The "Monday Popular Concerts" are fast justifying the title assumed when the compositions performed were by no means "popular;" and the growth of the public taste for chamber-music is still further shown by the patronage accorded to those excellent concerts given at St. George's Hall, under the name of "Musical Evenings." The "Wagner Society" has succeeded in intensifying the desire of the admirers of this composer to hear his works on the Operatic stage; but we cannot believe that the yearly presentation of the same pieces can further serve the cause. All praise, however, is due to Herr Dannreuther for the zeal and energy he has invariably displayed in conducting the concerts of the Society. The performances of Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir must be mentioned as having a distinctive feature, which has this year been more than usually kept in view; and special praise should be given to Mr. Willem Coenen, whose "Chamber Concerts of Modern Music" have been steadily persevered in, to the great delight of the chosen few who favoured him with their patronage.

A great deal of virtuous indignation has been publicly expressed respecting, as it appears to us, the right of delivering an opinion upon pianists as they severally appear before a London audience; and we are told that we should admire both the conception and execution of certain works by artists who have made their fame, because their departure from a preconceived ideal of perfection is a proof of their "individuality." Now this appears to us a repetition of the very injustice complained of; for although a variety of readings of a composition may be freely admitted, surely a particular reading may offend, more especially when the effect is that the individuality of the performer is infinitely more prominent than that of the composer. No person who has heard Mendelssohn would deny that there was an "individuality" in his playing; but the charm exercised over his listeners by this very peculiarity was due to the fact of his placing himself en rapport with his author, and earnestly endeavouring to expound his meaning, irrespective of any desire to exhibit himself. We have no wish to disturb the equanimity of those who can listen with pleasure to wrong notes, eccentric alterations of tempo, and passages tortured from the original to show the dexterity of the player, but we claim the like indulgence to ourselves if we cannot do so; and when we express dissatisfaction at the apparent victory of the "wonderful" over the "beautiful," it is only because we see that the progress of truth is temporarily impeded. We have too much faith to doubt the result, and therefore can afford to wait patiently, convinced that if a "higher development" of pianoforte playing should ever permanently obtain, it will be by raising the artist to the level of the art, and not by pulling down the art to the level of the artist. After these few preliminary observations, we may perhaps be credited with sincerity when we say that Dr. Hans von Bülow, Madlle. Krebs, Madame Essipoff, and M. Duvernoy should receive a cordial welcome as artists of the highest rank. Their various readings of the standard works ought to command our earnest attention, because they are all the result of profound study; but if the impression produced upon the hearer by their several styles is not to be honestly recorded, the duty of the critic will sink to that of an artistic court-newsman, whose employment it will be merely to chronicle the doings of those who rule for the hour, accompanied by as much flattery as loyal subjects usually demand from such an official.

The formation of the "Musical Artists' Society," for the trial of new works, and of a Society for the study of the art and science of Music, where Papers are to be read by the members, must be mentioned amongst the events of the year, especially as the constitution of both these Associations seems of a sufficiently solid character to lead us to anticipate good results. We may also say that the Festivals given during the last autumn at Bristol and Glasgow, and those which are to take place this year at Gloucester, Leeds, and Liverpool, afford abundant evidence that the demand for good music is now widely spread; for there can be no question that, although Charity is a powerful incentive to action, those who promote these gatherings would be loth to undertake the task were they not confident that they could rely upon a pecuniary as well as an artistic success.

Mr. Bellasis, by the publication of his interesting book on Cherubini, has recently reminded us that, whilst forming a Society for the performance of the music of the future, we are ignoring much excellent music of the past; and we may reasonably hope that so able an advocate may produce some good result. The chronological list of Cherubini's works, included in the volume alluded to, must astonish persons who know this author only by the few specimens ever heard in this country; and we believe that those who arrange the programmes of our greatest musical performances might consult their own interest by presenting some works by a composer who has earned the enthusiastic admiration of such men as Mendelssohn and Spohr. We sincerely hope that the narrow policy of excluding any but universally accredited compositions, pursued year after year at the two Italian Opera-houses, will be rigidly confined to the Lessees of these establishments; and that the Directors of our numerous Societies will see that with them alone rests the responsibility of either aiding or retarding the healthful progress of music in England.

At the approaching Festival of the Three Choirs, at Gloucester, commencing on the 8th inst., two features will be introduced which may materially influence the success of the gathering. In the first place, the ball at the Shire Hall will be abolished; and in the second place, after a full service in the nave of the Cathedral, on Friday evening (the final day of the Festival) the usual sermon will be preached by the Rev. Canon Barry, D.D., Principal of King's College. We have always been opposed to the custom of concluding a Festival of this character with a ball; and there can be no question that much inconvenience was caused by the sermon being delivered after the early service on the first morning of the Festival. Of the gratifying result of the meeting (a detailed notice of which will appear in our next number) there can be little doubt, seeing that the sale of tickets has already been almost unprecedented, and that 114 gentlemen have signified their intention of acting as stewards.

THE fact of the "Promenade Concerts" at Covent Garden Theatre being "under the direction of Messrs. A. and S. Gatti," will, we imagine, inspire the public with more confidence in the quality of the ices than of the music offered during the season. At all events, if we may judge from the programme of M. Hervé's "Heroic Symphony," given on the opening night, entitled "The Ashantee War," the promoters of the undertaking seem resolved to drive the intelligent portion of their audience to the "Refreshment department" as soon as possible. We quote a portion of the "argument" of M. Hervé's grand descriptive piece: "State of things at Cape Coast Castle—Efforts of the Governor to maintain peace and good relations with the Africans—Impossibility to obtain from the Ashantees the respect and fulfilment of Treaties—The Fantees, themselves victims of their treachery and cruelty, appeal to England for help and protection—The Governor convokes their Chiefs to a palaver." The embodiment of all these incidents in suitable music, would, we think, tax the inventive powers of the composer who, in a "Commercial Symphony," described the return of the City man to a late dinner, on the Dominant seventh; and resolved the chord of the thirteenth before sitting down to table, in deference to the superstitious feeling of those who believed this an unlucky number to meet at the social board.

WE are glad to find that our remarks upon the constitution of the recently formed "British and Dramatic Institute" have been received in the right spirit, and that new rules and new engagements have been made, in accordance with our suggestions. We must, however, reiterate our assertion that the programmes of the public concerts are not such as should emanate from an educational establishment. We may also say that some revision of the wording of the rules is absolutely necessary, in proof of which it will be sufficient, we think, to quote No. 10—"Choral Members must be able to read at sight, and have a fair knowledge of music; and attend on Tuesday after Rehearsal to be tried previous to their admission."

THE following, from an American advertisement of a series of "Characteristic musical stories," is an attempt to describe Pompon (the Chamberlain). "The first two measures contain the motive. The character to be portrayed is a plausible, crafty, uncertain one; so if the student well versed in sequent forms and harmonies intuitively reaches ahead by the customary avenues, he need not be surprised to find the crafty old chamberlain has doubled on him and dodged over and around harmonies in quite an unexpected manner." The observations upon No. 13—Blunose (the Steward)—are curt but expressive—"Drunk all the way through." Who shall say that this music has no "poetic basis?"

COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

ON Saturday the 8th ult., a series of Promenade Concerts, under the direction of M. Hervé, was inaugurated at this establishment with every prospect of a success which must be infinitely more gratifying to the proprietors than to the lovers of art. M. Hervé's Symphony, "The Ashantee War," appeals not to the criticism of a musical journal, and we leave it therefore to the tender mercy of those for whom it was manufactured. The violinist, M. Wieniawski, created a decided effect by his performance of Bach's Prelude to his violin Sonata in E major, but the patchwork nature of the concert may be imagined when we state that for the encore of this piece, he substituted a Caprice on "Willie, we have missed you." Another feature in the programme was the trombone playing of Mr. J. Harvey, which created genuine and deserved applause. Madlle. Benati, Madlle. Bianchi, Mr. Pearson, Mr. Carlton, and Mr. Lewis Thomas have been the principal vocalists. The fact of the Allegretto from Beethoven's Symphony in F (No. 8) and the Overtures to "Guillaume Tell" and "Masaniello" being taken out of the bills after the first evening will sufficiently indicate the taste of the new Conductor. We may say, however, that "Classical nights" are included in the programme of the season.

THE opening of the magnificent new Guildhall at Plymouth, by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, which took place on the 13th ult., was followed by a Musical Festival, which reflected the utmost credit upon Mr. F. N. Löhr and the members of the Plymouth Vocal Association under his direction, upon whom the success of the undertaking mainly depended. On the first day, Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was selected for performance, the principal parts being sustained by Mdlle. Corani, Mdlle. Mathilde Enequist, Miss Julia Elton, Miss Helen D'Alton, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Kerr Gedge, Mr. W. Drayton and Signor Agnesi. Mdlle. Enequist in the trying air, "Hear ye Israel," was highly effective, Mdlle. Corani created a decided impression by her singing in the duet of the Widow with Elijah, Miss D'Alton was successful in the air, "Woe unto him," and Miss Julia Elton's rendering of "O rest in the Lord" was so excellent as to cause an evident desire on the part of the audience to hear it once more. Mr. Lloyd's two tenor solos were delivered with true musical expression, and the part of the Prophet was sung by Signor Agnesi with such a reverential feeling for the excessive beauty of the music as to convince us that he will take a foremost rank as an Oratorio singer. The choruses were given with much precision, and with such judicious alternations of light and shade as to evidence the care with which the work had been prepared. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales was present during a portion of the concert, and expressed himself much pleased with the performance. At the miscellaneous concert in the evening, a Festal March, composed for the occasion by the hon. conductor, Mr. F. N. Löhr, and dedicated, by permission, to the Prince of Wales, was played with marked success, and repeated, by general desire. All the solo vocalists engaged in the performance of "Elijah" in the morning, contributed songs of a highly popular character, and the encores were numerous. On the next evening Haydn's "Creation" was given, with Mdlle. Enequist, Mr. Kerr Gedge, Mr. Drayton and Signor Agnesi as the principal singers. The Oratorio was excellently rendered throughout, the Choir again displaying the effect of systematic training and careful conductorship. At the Mechanics' Institution, before the rehearsal for the Oratorios, a presentation, in the form of a silver epergne, accompanied by an illuminated address, was made by the members of the Plymouth Vocal Association to their indefatigable conductor Mr. F. N. Löhr. The presentation was entrusted to Mr. J. Brooking Rowe, and Mr. Löhr, in acknowledging the gift, spoke most feelingly of his connection with the Association, and expressed a hope that for many years to come they should work as harmoniously together as they had hitherto done. The epergne bears the following inscription: "Presented by the Members of the Plymouth Vocal Association to their conductor, F. N. Löhr, Esqre., on the occasion of the musical festival in connection with the opening of the new Guildhall, by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, August 13th, 1874."

DR. PRIESTLEY, the celebrated chemist and dissenting minister, to whose memory a statue has just been erected in Birmingham, makes some sapient reflections on music in his autobiography. He says: "Being boarded with Mr. Eddowes, a very sociable and sensible man, and at the same time the person of the greatest property in the congregation, and who was fond of music, I was induced to learn to play a little on the English flute, as the easiest instrument: and though I was never a proficient in it, my playing contributed more or less to my amusement many years of my life. I would recommend the knowledge and practice of music to all studious persons; and it will be better for them if, like myself, they should have no very fine ear or exquisite taste, as by this means they will be more easily pleased, and be less apt to be offended when the performances they hear are but indifferent."

THE Second Quarterly Musical Service, on behalf of the Choir Fund, was held in St. Mary's, Haggerston, on Wednesday the 29th July, when a Selection from "Judas Maccabæus" was efficiently rendered by the St. Mary's Choir. Mr. W. R. Coventry presided at the organ with his usual ability, and played a variety of solos in a manner well calculated to display the capabilities of Father Smith's fine instrument.

THE St. George's Glee Union gave its usual monthly concert on the 7th ult., when A. Sullivan's Cantata, entitled "On Shore and Sea" was performed with great success. The solo parts were efficiently sustained by Miss Janet King and Mr. Jekyll. The Duet "Here on thy heart" and the Chorus "Sink and scatter" being especially well received. The second part was miscellaneous, the most notable features being the excellent singing of Mr. G. T. Carter, the fine rendering of Mendelssohn's "Nightingale" by the Choir, and Thalberg's "Masaniello," admirably played by Miss Julie Augarde. Mr. Garside conducted with his usual care.

REVIEWS.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

Ernani. A Tragic Opera, in Four Acts. Composed by Giuseppe Verdi. Edited by Berthold Tours, and translated into English by Natalia Macfarren.

No less than twenty-three of the most popular Operas having appeared in this octavo edition, and others being in preparation, there can be no question that the public has already sufficiently appreciated the soundness of the idea which originally prompted their publication—that of providing as reliable a hand-book of standard Operas as had already been issued, by the same publishers, of standard Oratorios. No doubt the care with which the music has invariably been printed, and the excellence of the English translation, have had much to do with the success of the experiment; but any change from the bald (and yet expensive) so-called translations of the Italian text with which opera-goers have been for so many years supplied must be for the better; and even supposing, therefore, that the intrinsic worth of these editions, in a musical point of view, may be lost upon the general reader, when the choice lies between the new and the old versions, few persons will be found to prefer the latter. The dramatic situations in "Ernani," and the effectiveness of much of the music, will always make it a favourite with vocalists; and there can be little doubt, therefore, that a season will rarely be allowed to pass over without its being frequently given. The indications of the score in the edition before us give an excellent idea of the instrumentation of the most important portions of the Opera; the translation is exceedingly good, and it is needless to say that in every respect the work is issued with all the completeness which has distinguished its predecessors.

Supplication and Praise. A Sacred Cantata. The words selected from the Holy Scriptures. Composed by Robert Sloman, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

THE faculty of making—if not of composing—sacred music appears so rapidly developing itself in this country, that we are beginning to dread the arrival of a time when an accredited musician—especially if he be a "Mus Bac." or "Mus. Doc."—will be looked on with contempt unless he has written and produced an Oratorio, or at least a Sacred Cantata or two. No doubt this plethora of religious works has in a great measure been caused by the growth of Choral Societies throughout the kingdom; for as every choir must have a Conductor, it is exceedingly unlikely that a person placed in so powerful a position will rest satisfied until he conducts his own music; and thus we find that a composition which might have remained for years upon the publishers' shelves almost unnoticed only a short time ago, will now be executed by a choral body, assisted by a competent band, and applauded with a vehemence which—although it deceives no one but the composer—has at least the effect of temporarily withdrawing the attention both of executants and audience from the study of the great works in art. Were the majority of these compositions worthless, it would be the duty of all who dare to speak the truth at once to condemn them; but this is not the case; on the contrary, very many of them are really excellent specimens of accomplished workmanship—the productions indeed of men who have earned for themselves a firm place in the profession, and fully proved by former writings that they possess the power of expressing themselves in clear and forcible musical language. This it is which makes it difficult to review a Cantata like the one before us strictly according to the magnitude of its claims, without seeming to think worse of it than we really do. Dr. Sloman has evidently approached his task with a due reverence for the subject; and throughout his composition we have some really admirable examples of choral writing. His double choruses are bold and effective—especially No. 11, "Magnify the Lord," which has several fine points—most of the solos are sympathetically written for the singers, and there is a good Trio for three female voices—of course, according to the "Lift thine eyes" model, without accompaniment—which, if well sung, would we doubt not ensure the usual encore. The opening chorus, "Bow down Thine ear," we like as well as any in the work, the treatment of the words, "I am poor and in misery" being particularly happy. The Cantata has already been given at the Albert Hall; but we cannot think that performing the instrumental portions of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" before it was a judicious step.

The Office of Holy Communion, set to original music by William Henry Monk.

He is a daring man who, in these days of similitude, will profess his music to be "original," and it might have been more graceful in the accomplished and experienced author, to leave us, namely, the world at large, to find out the unlikeness of his work to others, than to have declared it. Taking it at his own showing, however, the Service is, with the exception of one appropriation of the opening phrase of "O, rest in the Lord," as much his own as is any good musical work the property of him that produces it; and it has ample merit to supersede all question, beyond this one, of its intrinsic interest and aptitude for its purpose, which we are about to answer in the affirmative. There are four settings of the Kyrie, besides that for the Tenth Commandment, which are all pleasantly melodious. There is a point in the music for the last time, which many musicians may count as trifling, but which demands notice, as bearing on a principle that may have more important application elsewhere. This is the succession of consecutive 7ths, $\begin{smallmatrix} G & F \\ A & G \end{smallmatrix}$ over the bass D G, which may have arisen from a false view of the source of the prior chord, but has an unquestionably ill effect. The Credo is written with a free hand, and with a capital aim at declamation. Occasional passages in harmony admirably relieve the more prevalent employment of eighths and unisons for the voices. It is a little surprising to find one with such long and constant habit of voices, as makes Mr. W. H. Monk famous, writing for tenors down to G on the first bass line; but so he does, for the end of the Passion sentence. The treatment is unusual, but eminently thoughtful, of the sentence beginning "And He shall come again," which opens but moderately loud, and fades into a whisper at "to judge both the quick and the dead," as implying awe in the belief in the tremendous moment, rather than jubilation "in the glory" of the second Advent. The Sursum Corda is set emphatically, because concisely, the priest having here, as in some other numbers, an ancient Church phrase for the Intonation. The Sanctus is well conceived, beginning most softly, to represent the lowliest reverence, and breaking forth in loudest acclaim in the repetition of the first words, as if in emulation of the hosts of heaven. Extra to the Office in the Prayer Book, the Benedictus follows, of which, the merit of the music is our composer's justification; let who will, justify the interpolation of the words. Another insertion in the English Communion Service is the Agnus Dei, the appropriation of which, in this place, from a Prayer Book of Edward VI., is for others to discuss; we like the music greatly, and esteem it the best portion of Mr. Monk's interesting work. The Gloria is the concluding number. One passage in this is reprehensible, namely, on the words "O Lord God," in page 12, score 2, bars 3 and 4, where there is false relation between the A for the soprano and the A flat for the bass, and, still more vexatious, a progression of 4ths between bass and tenor. How curious is it that musicians, who would shrink from a consecution of 5ths as from anything that was vilest, scruple not to write far uglier progressions as if they believe they do so with impunity! We wonder, considering how words are repeated, at the curtness with which, "For Thou only," &c., is set; it is, we think, out of proportion to the relative importance of the text, and it gives abruptness to the conclusion. The candour of our objections will, we hope, attest the sincerity of our admiration, which has been freely expressed; the work will be of real value in many choirs.

"I looked, and beheld a door was opened in Heaven." Verse Anthem for All Saints' Day. Composed by S. Parkman Tuckerman, Mus. Doc., Cantuar.

It is a matter as much of pleasure as of surprise to discover a composer of such merit as is evinced in the works that we have now to notice, whose name is as yet unfamiliar to the world; and we admire as much the reticence, which has enabled him to hold back the manifestation of his musicianship until he could put forth such a collection of works as should at once command respect, no less than we acknowledge the good qualities whereby these works are signalized. So much may be said of each, that in justice they must be noticed singly; but we offer these preliminary words to introduce Dr. Tuckerman to the reader. He is, we learn, an American, some years resident in England, who has graduated here—would that it had been under a musician rather than under an Archbishop—and has spent some pains in making himself familiar with the musical doings in most of our large ecclesiastical establishments. To those fellow-artists who have not yet met him, his music will ensure him a welcome, and this it is our task to describe.

"I looked, and behold," the work now before us, might better be called a Cantata, or even a small Oratorio, than an Anthem—so great is its length and so varied its character. It comprises no less than thirteen numbers, consisting of Choruses, concerted and other solo pieces, and Recitatives—and there are some of them subdivided into several movements. This last is what is least to be admired in the composition, for it gives an air of fragmentariness. The fact of its unusual extent necessarily limits the occasions for its Church performance, but it takes not from its interest nor from its merit. The first section is an organ Introduction that is grand in character, has some striking modulations, and displays the instrument with admirable effect. The Recitative for tenor, like several others in the course of the work, declaims the words well, and is so accompanied as to give distinct prominence to the voice and clearness to the enunciation. No. 3, "And they rest not," is a short Chorus including the Sanctus, the reading of which is lowly and reverential, swelling and dying away to diversify the tone, but never breaking the sense of meek devotion. Another Recitative tells of the earthquake and the hiding of the mighty men among the mountains. Their cry, "Fall on us and hide us," is embodied in a very dramatic Chorus for two Choirs, the voices being divided for the sake of response more than for multiplication of parts; the agitated and very animated character of this contrasts capably with the foregoing, and makes a well-timed relief. The Recitative "After this, I beheld" leads into the Chorus No. 7, "Worthy is the Lamb" which fills well enough its place in the entire composition, and avoids comparison with Handel's stupendous setting of the same text, by aiming successfully at an entirely different style. Yet another tenor Recitative leads into a Quartett, "These are they," which flows smoothly. No. 10 is a Chorus with passages for Soprano and Tenor solo, "Therefore are they," which materially suffers from the uncongeniality of its key F with that of the preceding piece, G. It is true there is a momentary interlude to lead from the one key into the other, but it is always a weakness to have an instrumental link which contributes nothing to the expression of what goes before or after, and which seemingly takes up the hearer's time only to accomplish a modulation; and again, an interlude of four bars is quite insufficient to annul the impression of one tonality, and leave us free for the acceptance of another so remote as that here chosen. One of the most striking incidents in the work is the Quartett for Treble and Alto voices, "Their sun shall no more go down." The Recitative that follows prepares the way for the final Chorus, which is a resetting of the words of No. 7. Was it that the composer sought to justify his appropriation of the text, by showing not only that Handel had not exhausted it, but that so neither had he, and he repeated it therefore with entirely different music from what he wrote before? A fugal point gives some animation to this movement, but leads us to expect a further development of the subject than the composer has made.

Six Short Anthems for Cathedral or Parish Choirs.
Music composed by S. P. Tuckerman.

AMONG these are two pieces from the foregoing works, "And they rest not," and "Their sun shall no go down," neither of which suffers from its isolation. Curiously, all the six, save the last, are in triple measure. This greatly prevails, too, in the long work noticed above; whence one may infer that the composer's thoughts flow most naturally by three in a bar, or else that he had some regard for the antique definition of "Perfect Time," which referred to a note that was divisible into three, and therefore typical of the Trinity, in comparison with "Imperfect Time," wherein a note could be divided but into two, and the former was supposed to be the fitter for sacred music. The other four anthems are "Thou shalt show me," for alto solo with chorus; "Come unto Him," which will not supersede the lovely Messiah pastoral to the same words; "God so loved the world," which is agreeably flowing; and "Lighten our darkness," in which a startling employment of the Frenchified chromatic common chord of the minor 6th of the key, is somewhat out of keeping with the placid character of the whole. The anthems are all extremely short, and, where this is a desideratum, their musical merit will be another inducement for their adoption.

A Morning Service in C. Composed by S. P. Tuckerman.

THIS is by much the least interesting of the publications now before us by the same author, which may be accounted for by the lapse of twenty-four years since its composition and his artistic progress in the interim. It was written for the English Church in Florence, and it indicates at least that the establishment has the means of performing a Choral Service, which is satisfactory as to the state of the Reformed Church in Italy. The Te Deum emulates the manner of the elder worthies of Church music, in respect of their irregularity of rhythm. The Jubilate is more attractive; a pretty effect is attained by the employment of the quartett of trebles and altos on the words "Serve the Lord with gladness"—a favourite device of the composer, which is here happily applied. The Kyrie is the best piece in the service, and its low position in the register of each voice will give it a very subdued and supplicating effect. The Sanctus has also a tone of humility, which seems to be the reading of the text best approved by the writer, for in all his settings of it and analogous passages he employs this treatment. These appear to have been all the pieces that were open to musical treatment in the Tuscan capital, in 1850.

"I was glad when they said unto me." A Festival Anthem, for Solo, Quartett and Chorus. Music composed by S. P. Tuckerman.

FAR more feeling and far more skill are displayed in this, than in the work last described. It is written with due regard for the copious resources of the modern organ, and for their legitimate availability as a means of heightening, and varying, and alternating the vocal effect. This piece opens, for instance, with an organ prelude of considerable extent, which contains some pleasing harmony, but we may not thus define the upward progression of the inverted 7th of C, to the inverted 5th of F, while a higher melody descends from C to A. We have foreborne from citing other exceptional points of harmony in the course of these several compositions, but we name this one, because we know there are some persons who would defend it, and we think its effect should secure its condemnation. A very spirited Chorus is happily diversified by a passage for solo voices, "For thither the tribes go up;" and, on the resumption of the full power, the words "Give thanks" are admirably brought out in opposition to some florid passages for the accompanying instrument. An entirely separable movement for soprano solo, quartett, and chorus, "O pray for the peace," is sweet and tranquil in character, and there are many occasions when this may be given apart from the rest of the work. An excellent effect is produced by a single phrase of Adagio, "Peace be within thy walls," which is resumed and extended at the close of the work, where it is cleverly distributed to a double choir. The animation of the opening movement is resumed between these two exhortations for tranquillity, to express "plenteousness within thy palaces;" and here the composer shows himself at his best. The anthem is well worthy of note, and we should be glad to hear it where it might receive justice in performance.

"I will sing a new song." Composed by Philip Armes.

THIS is an anthem of broad applicability, being designed for use on Rogation Days, or at Harvest Festivals, in spring-tide or in autumn; and its merit should command for it a hearing, as it will ensure for it a liking, both before and after the reign of flowers. The first movement is a graceful Andante, in the somewhat rare measure, for Church use, of $\frac{3}{4}$, which is melodious throughout, and full of smooth and fresh harmonies. A tenor solo follows, "Save me and deliver me," which is in the key of F sharp minor, the preceding movement being in A. Its speciality consists in the constant motion of quavers, for the right and left hands of the organist in alternate bars, that accompanies the vocal cantilena, and the effect of this is rich, and quite unhackneyed. It is succeeded by an Allegro in B, which is the cleverest portion of the whole, beginning with the words "That our sons may grow up." It is written for eight voices, mostly used by four and four in alternation, but occasionally brought altogether. The responses are not of mere phrases, but are complete strains; and they are not always assigned to the opposite sides of the choir, but sometimes the four upper voices are answered by the four lower, with admirable contrast and agreeable variety. It is most fortunate for the good effect of a long piece, if its character can be diversified by a movement of such structure as the present; and, in this instance, it is so with great advantage. We return to four parts for the conclusion, which is a spirited Chorus in E, "Happy are the people." After a broad opening in full harmony, this assumes a fugal character, but it would be injustice to more carefully elaborated writing to call it a fugue, for the answer is free (replying to the dominant with the super-tonic instead of with the tonic), and so is the entire nature of the development. The successive entry of the parts, however, and the frequent reappearance of the subject, help greatly in the animation of the whole, and the interest is sustained unceasingly to the end. We would liefer that the termination were in the key of the commencement; if it be a prejudice that a work should end in the key of its opening, it is one we cannot shake off; and we own that to finish in the key of the dominant, makes the impression that there is still something to come, something to bring us home to our starting point, for which the longing ear listens in vain. On the whole, here is a capital composition, and more of it would be welcome, even if it began in E or closed in A; and Durham Cathedral is well off in having an organist who could write it.

I love the Lord. Sacred Song. Words from Psalm cxvi., verses 1, 2, 3, 4, 7 and 8. Music by J. Miles Bennett.

THE words of the Psalm selected by Mr. Bennett demand a somewhat more fervent setting than he has given us; but the melody is at least vocal, and the harmonies are smooth and appropriate throughout. The answer to the first phrase in the symphony, commencing upon a bare fourth, somewhat distresses us; and unfortunately it is not only repeated, but the passage again occurs in the relative minor, after the double bar, so that the harshness of this effect evidently does not strike the composer. The best part of the song is the "Allegro," commencing on the words "Return unto thy rest, O! my soul," the theme of which, with the detached quaver accompaniment, well expresses the feeling of the verses. In listening to the entire composition, however, we cannot but feel that it is fragmentary, although many of the fragments have abstract merit: indeed so musicianlike and earnest a work as this strengthens us in the conviction that to write a really good sacred song is a very much more difficult task than young composers imagine.

Palaces in air. Song. Words by E. A. Beck, M.A.

Love will last. Song. Words by C. M.

Composed by George Garrett.

THE verses of the first of these songs have been rather against the composer, we own, but we scarcely think that he has made the best of them, although there is much musical feeling shown throughout both the melody and accompaniments. The words "Castles that hope's sunrise gilded" do not certainly very readily lend themselves to a musical setting; but Dr. Garrett has not smoothed the difficulty by putting a crotchet to each syllable in two bars of common time. We are also of opinion that for the simplicity of the subject, there is somewhat too much modulation. An effective point is the short Recitative, which, after a close on the dominant of E minor, leads unexpectedly to an eloquent phrase in G major, and afterwards to the original key and subject. We infinitely prefer the second song, "Love will last," the anonymous author of which has supplied the composer with what Herr Wagner calls a "poetic basis" for his music. The melody is extremely pleasing, and the unceasing triplet accompaniment, divided between the two hands, gives an effect of lightness to the voice part in excellent sympathy with the poetry. Admirable, too, is the change to the tonic minor on the words "Wild and bleak the night wind blusters"—the triplets in the accompaniment being still continued—and the major stealing in for the final phrases gives a feeling of unity to the song which stamps it as the composition of a thinker as well as a worker. Although a most unpretending little vocal piece, both singers and listeners will we are certain agree with us that everything attempted is well done, and we confidently, therefore, recommend "Love will last" as much to the attention of professional as amateur vocalists.

That smile of thine, can I forget? (Mine and thine). Song. Words by Richard Yates Sturges. Music by Stephen S. Stratton.

THE name of this composer is new to us, but his graceful and musicianlike song should ensure him a welcome from all who desire to escape from the vocal platitudes of the day. The style of the composition—especially the opening symphony, which is used as a figure throughout the song—reminds us strongly of Mendelssohn; but we willingly pardon this, perhaps unintentional, reminiscence in consideration of the unity of design with which the author has evidently worked. The theme is extremely melodious, and the occasional change in the character of the accompaniment gives much effect to the words. One point we particularly admire is the somewhat unexpected phrase in the tonic minor, on the words "But summer's glow is oft delayed;" and the conclusion of the song, after the pause, is exceedingly happy. So carefully considered and sympathetic a setting of these musical verses will sufficiently justify Mr. Stratton in endeavouring still further to advance his claim to be accepted amongst the recognised song-writers of the time.

The Voice the Music of Language and the Soul of Song. A short Essay on the art of Singing. By Wilbye Cooper.

IN the preface to this well-considered little essay the author says, that his aim is "to induce his readers to think—before they sing, while they sing, and when they listen." It seems, indeed, at first, strange that it should be necessary to enforce so obvious a method of proceeding upon persons who practise an art, even as amateurs; but experience has proved to most of us, that the majority of those who display even a well-trained voice have given but little attention to the principles of vocalisation. Mr. Cooper very properly commences by urging upon the student the absolute necessity of acquiring the power of sustaining any vowel sound upon any given note. "Consonants," he truly says, "form no part in a vowel sound; therefore, there must be no attempt to mix them up together, but each must perform its own part in every word, syllable, or part of a word. The vowel must give the sound, the consonant the articulation, in moving from one word or syllable to another." And further on, after distinctly proving that the attempt to produce a sound upon a consonant is a simple absurdity, and recommending the vowels to be spoken, and then sung in practice, he states that "the consonants beginning and ending a word must take up no portion of the time allotted to the musical note," a rule the importance of which cannot be overstated. We have also some extremely valuable directions for producing the voice in the most natural manner, and also for the proper management of the breath; for, as our author rightly observes, "without proper attention to phrasing, language, accent, and breathing, a tune may be executed in such a manner that the composer shall not be able to recognise his own melody." He also devotes some portion of his essay to the consideration of the "portamento," and endeavours to separate this from that fatal habit of crawling up to a note, so often heard in the psalm-singing of a mixed congregation, and even (as he gently hints) occasionally in our public concert-rooms, from some of our recognized solo vocalists. The amateur will derive much benefit from reading attentively what Mr. Cooper says about the necessity of fully understanding the intention of the composer in every work to be performed; for facility in reading notes too often leads to the habit of considering that mere accuracy in time and tune is all that is demanded. "Why is it," writes our author, "that Joachim delights us more than any other violin player? Not because he produces greater tone, but because he displays greater refinement of feeling and conception of melodic form and phrasing; so that, whether we listen to his playing either a quaint melody of Bach, or one of the grand compositions of Beethoven, he leaves nothing to desire." This observation is as applicable to vocal as to instrumental music; and, indeed, perhaps even more so, for the human voice, if properly trained, exercises a more potent spell over the listener than any artificial instrument, and Herr Joachim himself is but a singer on the violin.

Marcha para el Piano. Compuesta por Annie Mercedes Quevedo.

FEEBLENESS is apparent throughout this March, but the subjects are bold, and the theme after the double bar is melodious. Inexperienced composers always rely upon their recollection rather than their invention, and here therefore we have the conventional moving accompaniment in octaves to the latter part of the March. This kind of bass is not, however, so easy to write as it appears; and as instances of the truth of this we may mention the two F sharps occurring in similar motion, in Bar 10, page 3, and the two fifths, D A, C G, in Bar 14, page 7. These are certainly minor defects, but they prove that even to write a good March it is necessary to have studied counterpoint.

Am See; Im Wald; Frühlingslied. Three Musical Sketches for the Pianoforte. Composed by Charles Henry Shepherd, Associate of the Royal Academy of Music.

AN artist who has received his education in our National Musical Institution, should not give German titles to his compositions, especially when he tacks to one of them a descriptive piece of poetry in English. Passing over this little bit of affectation, we have much praise for Mr. Shepherd's Sketches. "Am See" is a characteristic little piece, melodious and well written, with some good practice for varieties of touch. We think it a pity in simple music like this to tax the performer with such extensions as we find in the 27th and following two bars, but the composer only falls in with the fashion of the hour, which appears to favour the writing of many passages to be taken in with the eye rather than with the ear. "Im Wald" has a very original theme, which is as much developed as the length of the piece requires. The cadence seems somewhat out of place, and has the effect of prolonging the dominant harmony beyond the time suited for a sketch of such small dimensions, but this of course is a mere matter of opinion. The "Frühlingslied" is a bright little piece, and we think is likely to be the favourite of the three. But what is the meaning of the double sharp before the F in the 14th bar?

Two Gavottes, for the Pianoforte. Composed by John Gledhill.

IN the interest of music publishers who are constantly pouring upon us a shower of Bourrées, Gavottes, Sarabands and other dances of a past period, we hope that the demand keeps pace with the supply. Certain it is that those players who have made themselves well acquainted with the compositions of this character by the old writers have now before them some very excellent imitations by modern composers, which if not quite equal to the original, would deceive the majority of those to whose judgment they are submitted. Mr. Gledhill is a very apt worker in this school; and his music proves that he has well studied the models upon which his compositions are based. His first Gavotte, in A minor, is melodious and effective, a good contrast being obtained by the theme in the tonic major. No. 2, in G minor, has a highly attractive subject, and both hands are well employed throughout. It would be good, however, for Mr. Gledhill to look more carefully at his proofs in any future publication, for inaccuracies occur which might remain uncorrected by many amateurs; as instances of which we may mention the omission of the ♯ before the G in the last chord, bar 4, page 6; and also before the final A in the treble part of bar 12, in the same page.

Thy Spirit's low replies. Song. Words by Thomas K. Hervey. Composed by Rosetta O'Leary Vinning.

WE are glad to find that the accomplished composer of this song has at length resolved to publish under her own name, for the real musical eloquence which distinguishes the composition before us—as well as some others which we have noticed by the same writer—must eventually receive due appreciation, and we are always sorry when a true artist seeks to veil his or her personality from the public. Those who follow our reviews must remember that a short time ago we spoke in the highest terms of two of Mrs. O'Leary's songs—"In the Pyramid's shadow," and "That dear song I loved the best"—which were published under the assumed name of "Allan Hyde;" and all the praise we bestowed upon these is fully merited by this later one: indeed we think it the best she has yet composed. The poetry, by the late T. K. Hervey, is certainly most suggestive, but a common-place setting of it would have utterly marred its beauty, for the author was a musician at heart, and felt, if he could not write, the notes which sympathised with his verses. The composer has thoroughly caught the spirit of the words; and both theme and accompaniments—if so we may separate what are in fact inseparable—show a keen appreciation of legitimate musical expression. The placid opening in F major, and, after the close on the dominant, the unexpected change to A flat, are points highly to be commended. We may also mention the excellent effect of the arpeggio accompaniment, which occurs for the first time on the words "There comes a voice from far off streams," and is suddenly broken off, leaving the voice alone for the final phrase. A contralto singer who can fully enter into the feeling both of the poet and musician, may make this composition highly effective; but those who love the "pretty songs" of the day will neither like it nor understand it.

I waited for the Lord. Duet from Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise.

Andantino Grazioso, from Haydn's String Quartett in C.

Transcribed for the Piano by Berthold Tours.

THE general fault in "Transcriptions" is that they so distort the originals that their composers would scarcely recognise them. It is true that such distortions are not Transcriptions, but then they are called so; and it is with the full knowledge of this fact that we feel it a duty to guard young pupils from making their first acquaintance with classical works by the aid of these caricatures. Mr. Tours is doing good service to the art by the publication of such arrangements as those now before us, for it is impossible to imagine more faithful adaptations of the composer's original design to our household instrument. The subjects he has selected, too, are extremely happy. Mendelssohn's beautiful Duet will be certain to delight young players; and Spohr's well-known "As pants the hart," although perhaps not quite so familiar, is melodious enough to make the practice of the piece a pleasure, instead of a task. The voice parts in the Duet are clearly brought out, and the arrangement is by no means difficult.

The musical score is written for a four-part vocal choir (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and piano accompaniment. It is in the key of D major (two sharps) and 4/4 time. The score consists of several systems of staves. The vocal parts are written in treble and bass clefs, while the piano accompaniment is in grand staff (treble and bass clefs). The lyrics are: "pour'd Al - le - lu - ia to the Lord, With Al - le - lu - ia e - vermore, The Son and Spi - rit we a - dore, Praise be done to the Three in One, Praise be done to the Three in One, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia!" The score includes various musical notations such as notes, rests, bar lines, and dynamic markings like "rall." (rallentando) and "fine." (fine). The piano accompaniment features chords and arpeggiated figures that support the vocal melody.

The "Andantino Grazioso" will call up an agreeable reminiscence of the Quartett from which it is taken; and the part-writing is so distinct that but a moderate amount of attention will enable the performer fully to realise the composer's meaning. Mr. Tours may multiply his arrangements of standard works with benefit both to students and teachers.

SECULAR MUSIC IN CHURCHES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—“Musicus” will do the world good service if he can succeed in putting down the foolish custom of playing pianoforte music in churches, which he has called attention to in your August number.

This evil would not be endured, if all who are supposed to “learn music” were taught that music is a language, and that certain combinations of musical sound express certain feelings, sentiments and passions to all ears that are trained to understand the phrases which belong to the musical tongue. Without acquiring a knowledge, first of the vocabulary of musical sound, next of musical sentences and grammar, and lastly of the works of great composers, it is impossible for listeners to understand what music says to those who hear it with cultivated ear. Conceive some classical scholar, also a fine speaker, reciting, say, a tragedy of Æschylus to an audience ignorant of the Greek tongue, and not even acquainted, by means of translations, with the subject recited. What pleasure would such an audience get from the recital? Yet this is precisely the state of things (if you except one out of every hundred among the listeners) in many a concert-room, especially in provincial towns, when great artists play the works of great composers. It is this lamentable ignorance of musical language, so common among us, that enables performers of small knowledge and bad taste to exhibit their mechanical skill (such as it is) with success in concert-rooms, and, worse still, in places of public worship. There are certain churches and chapels frequented by worshippers who are possessed with the idea that the service is not “hearty” unless the congregation, no matter how ignorant of the vocal art, takes part in the “singing.” Well, if these congregations are persuaded that they cannot worship their Maker without shouting forth sacred words out of tune and time, by all means let them have their way. Even if their rude service should resemble the sounds made by a pack of hounds or a wild-beast show, I’ve nothing to say against it, farther than that I should be very sorry to be forced to listen to it. For if these ignorant folk do their best, simply, it will no doubt be accepted as other mean offerings are accepted, when offered by warm hearts. But that sort of noise is altogether another thing from the performance, by persons who ought to know better, of music written for a totally different purpose to the one they are putting it to. There is a certain large and popular Roman Catholic Church in London where the organist thinks it fitting to perform, by way of an offertory piece, at weddings, one of Chopin’s Nocturnes,—a sweet sentimental piece, ending with a cadenza, which is charming on the pianoforte in a drawing-room, but simply ridiculous played on an organ. I never hear runs and roulades on a great organ without fancying I see an elephant dance. Indeed, the fiddle passages in Masses which require an orchestra are absurd when executed on an organ. But setting that aside, and supposing even that the Nocturne did not end with a cadenza, what can be more indecorous or in worse taste than performing a sentimental Nocturne in a church during the Marriage Service? The church is not the place for giving expression to sentiment and earthly affection. Feelings that are lawful and innocent in other places must be suppressed in a place of worship. To play the “Wedding March” when the service is over, and the wedding party leaving the church, is no more objectionable than ringing the bells. It is quite a different thing to playing a bit of tender sentiment while the bride and bridegroom are kneeling at the altar. I give this merely as one specimen of the bad taste and ignorance of musical language common among us.

The Masses of Mozart, though exquisite as music, contain much that is utterly unfit for the church. There is material for more than one Opera to be found in Mozart’s Masses. There are plenty of love-songs, of gay songs, of trios and quartetts, expressing the joys, sorrows and perplexities which belong to the Opera. “What!” some will say, “do you venture to accuse Mozart of not knowing what he was writing about?” A thousand times, No. But Mozart was not a free agent. From his childhood he was trained and incited to write for the Church what would please the princely and imperial patrons who were charmed by his marvellous gift, but insisted on his using it to minister to their pleasure and fancy. Society was in a frivolous state. The higher classes were tired of religious music of the noblest kind. The music of Palestrina and Marcello and their schools was appreciated only by ecclesiastical bodies rich enough to have it cultivated and performed with care. Light music entered the sanctuary, and Haydn and Mozart, carried away by the current of popular feeling, wrote what was demanded of them, and produced religious music which charmed the ear and intoxicated the fancy, instead of that which raises the mind heavenwards. Here and there, in their divine music, we meet with bits of true devotional character; but before long the solemnity and majesty of music worthy to be sung by angelic choirs is interrupted by strains fit only for the stage. In fact, the Emperor Joseph urges Mozart to compose for the Imperial Chapel music closely resembling what he admired at the theatre.

There are persons who imagine that orchestral accompaniments are enough to render music irreligious. Such persons are insensible to the devotional power of the music of Handel and Bach. These worthy persons are shocked by the sight of fiddlers in a church. Considering that the strings resemble the human voice, this is a strange prejudice. It must come from some early associations of fiddles and dancing. If an orchestra were to play Offenbach’s or Lecocq’s music in a church, it would be indecent and profane no doubt; but are matters mended when an organ plays theatrical music? And pianoforte music of a like kind is no better. When Rowland Hill said, “It was hard the devil should have all the good tunes,” and so set his pious congregation to sing hymns to vulgar, popular song-tunes, he was led wrong through being profoundly ignorant of musical language. A good many pious people in the present day are making the same blunder.

But I am trespassing too much upon your space, and must come to an end.

THE PEOPLE’S PLAIN SONG.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I see it announced that “the Festal and Ferial Responses will shortly be issued by the same Editors as the Cathedral Psalter,” and that “the People’s Plain Song will be clearly indicated in a line by itself.” I suppose this means that the Plain Song will not be coincident with the Treble part of the harmony. As this edition of the Responses will be issued with the sanction of great names, and will probably come into very general use, I wish with all deference to say a word or two against what I consider to be a grievous mistake, assuming my supposition to be correct. I have had many years experience of choirs and congregations in one of the most musical districts of England, viz., the West Riding of Yorkshire, and the fact is the Plain Song may be printed as clearly and largely and separately as you please upon paper; when the Service comes to be sung, the “people” will sing the Treble part, and nothing will persuade them to do otherwise, especially if the Treble part runs higher than the Plain Song, and has somewhat more of a melodious phrase in it. As a consequence, wherever Boyce’s, or any similar arrangement of Tallis is used, the untrained voices of the people are shouting to a pretty tripping melody prayers which ought to be sung p, if not pp, to the ancient Plain Song of the Church. I believe it to be as utterly impracticable (except for a trained choir alone) to sing Tallis's Responses as they were sung in Tallis's day, as to sing the 100th Psalm, or French, or Dundee, as they were originally written. For good or for evil the Tenor part, as the Melody for the people, is gone for ever, and, as I conceive, the sooner the innumerable so-called Tallis's Responses are discontinued, and arrangements edited in Tallis's spirit, and such as Tallis himself would have sanctioned were he living now, viz., with the Plain Song as the Treble part, the better in every respect for the Choral Responses of the Church. I have assumed throughout my letter the use of harmonized Responses. I know that unison singing is much affected in the south; let me record my conviction that it will never be accomplished in the north.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

MR. J. G. CALLCOTT'S MOTETT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I have no intention of questioning the opinion of your review of my Motett "O Deus! ego amo te" in your last number, but I do think that a reviewer ought to know that the original Hymn was written by Francisco de Xavier, the friend and companion of Loyola the Jesuit, and also that the English translation is partly by Longfellow and partly by one of the compilers of "Hymns Ancient and Modern."

I am, Sir, yours obediently,

J. G. CALLCOTT.

Richmond, July 27th, 1874.

[The Reviewer thanks Mr. Callcott for his information, but still thinks that, whoever the Author, the word "ignominious" is not good for musical use, though it might have great power were the translation to be spoken. The fame of St. Francis Xavier, the great missionary to Portuguese India, will suffer little from the non-recognition of his hand in the original Latin Hymn.]

THE MINOR SCALE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Of late several interesting notes regarding the minor scale have appeared in the Musical Times. There is a belief with many that there is only one minor scale, and it is derived from the major scale, while some others of a more recent school assert that there is no minor scale, but just the major commencing on La. This latter idea supposes a note of repose or kind of a keynote on La. Now if the fact of a scale commencing on La has a different mental effect from the scale commencing on Do, there must be some distinction under whatever name it goes, and if one calls it La and another names it minor, both mean one thing, and so the matter ends. That the minor is derived from the major is a generally adopted theory. It never seems to have entered the thoughts of writers on the subject, that it might just be possible that the major is derived from the minor. There is only one major scale, but of minors there is a variety of modes, and theories that are brought forth to make minors derivatives of the major, bear as strongly that the major may be derived from the minors. The usual example in the minor scale is to ascend one way and descend another:

Now these two are as distinct scales as:

Saying that these scales are derived from the same major scale is something different from proving it. Another minor which must on the same principle be derived from the same major scale is sometimes called the Dorian scale:

This is a scale in which very few favourite melodies are written; some appear in Scottish collections but the following beautiful air, once very popular in Scotland, though not found, so far as I am aware, in any printed Collection, and sung to the song "Burns and his dear Highland Mary," shows that a good melody can be written in this much neglected scale. Properly speaking the scale is seated on D, the second note of the scale of C, as follows:

Moderato.

The oft quoted saying that one minor scale represents all minors cannot hold, seeing that the introduction of any extraneous note must of necessity alter a scale, and to say that these diversified minors are each and all taken from one major scale must be equally untenable.

Yours, &c.

D. KIPPEN.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

C. W.—As an "accidental" is any note which alters the fixed order of tones and semitones in the diatonic scale, the question of our correspondent is meaningless.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

ABERYSTWYTH.—On Tuesday evening, the 4th ult., the Temperance Hall was crowded with an enthusiastic audience, on the occasion of Mr. Brinley Richards's concert. "There is a green hill far away," sung by Miss Lizzie Evans, was encored, but her great success and undoubtedly the gem of the evening, was "Tell me, my heart." The duet, "Autumn evening," was admirably sung and heartily applauded. Miss M. J. Williams was encored in "I'm a merry Zingara," and Miss Marian Williams was recalled in "She wandered down the mountain." Mr. Ap Herbert was encored in "The Yeoman," and other encores would have been insisted on if the length of the programme had not rendered repetition impossible. Professor Grimley, at the conclusion of the concert, proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Brinley Richards and the ladies for the pains they had taken in getting up the successful series of concerts which had that night been brought to a conclusion, which was carried unanimously. Mr. Brinley Richards, in returning thanks, enlarged most eloquently upon the advantages of the University College of Wales, to enrich the funds of which the series of concerts, now terminated had been given; and paid a special tribute of praise to Mr. Stephen Evans, whose unwearied exertions, he said, had so materially benefited the cause. After some remarks from Mr. Stephen Evans, "God bless the Prince of Wales," solos by Miss Lizzie Evans and Miss Marian Williams, was sung, the audience standing up and heartily joining in the chorus. The chairman was the Mayor, and the conductor Pencerdd Ceredigion, who discharged his duties with great ability and to the entire satisfaction of the large audience.

ADSLAIDE, AUSTRALIA.—The third season concert of the Philharmonic Society took place at the Town Hall, in April last, before a large audience. The band consisted of about 15 or 16 instrumentalists, with Mr. E. Spiller as conductor, Mr. J. Hall as leader and Mr. W. R. Pybus as pianist. The first part of the programme consisted of Romberg's setting of Schiller's Lay of the Bell. Mr. Rogers took the part of the master bellfounder very successfully. Mr. T. Trudgeon sang the tenor solos with great precision, and Miss Vaughan took the whole of the soprano solos, which were given with unflinching precision and considerable taste and expression. The choruses were very effectively rendered. The first and second parts of Haydn's Seasons formed the second portion of the programme. The solos were taken by Mr. Nash, Mrs. G. T. Harris, and Mr. T. Trudgeon.

BANGOR.—The Eisteddfod, which commenced on Tuesday, the 18th ult., appears to have been thoroughly successful. On the first day the Festival was presided over by Lord Clarence Paget, on the second by the Lord Bishop of Bangor, on the third by Captain Verney, and on the fourth by Sir Watkin Williams Wynn. Mr. Brinley Richards and Mr. John Thomas delivered able addresses in awarding the musical prizes. The singing of Miss Edith Wynne was greatly admired, and many well deserved compliments were paid her upon her recent successes in the metropolis.

BUXTON.—A special concert was given on Thursday evening the 30th July, which was an immense success. The Pavilion was filled, and presented a most animated appearance. The band, led by Mr. Julian Adams, and augmented for the occasion, commenced the concert with Weber's Overture to Der Freyschütz, which was played in magnificent style. Madame O. Williams sang Smart's "Sailor's Story," with an expression and taste which at once gained the good opinion of her audience. Beethoven's Sonata for pianoforte and violin, by Mr. Adams and Mr. Otto Bernhard, was rendered to perfection. The appearance of Mr. Sims Reeves was greeted with a storm of welcome; and his singing of Beethoven's "Adelaide" was applauded in a manner which brought him again on the platform to bow his acknowledgments. A similar compliment was paid to Madame Williams when she sang "The Skipper and his Boy" (Virginia Gabriel). Weber's "Concert-stück," well played by Mr. Julian Adams, concluded the first part. In the second part Mr. Sims Reeves sang, "Come into the garden, Maud," and was so energetically and heartily encored that he repeated the last verse. Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony was played with great precision, and was followed by what the audience evidently considered the vocal gem of the evening, "My Pretty Jane" by Mr. Sims Reeves, which produced rounds of applause, but failed to bring forward Mr. Reeves. The concert closed with Gungl's grand march, "Alexandre."

CARTMEL.—The second annual festival of the Choral Union of the Rural Deanery, was held on the 19th ult., in the fine old Church of St. Mary's. There was a good attendance. The choir taking part in the service numbered 77 sopranos, 18 altos, 21 tenors, and 26 basses. Shortly before 3 p.m., Mr. W. J. Lamb commenced the ingoing voluntary—Alma Redemptoris (Novello), and at its conclusion was sung the processional hymn, "Forward be our watchword." The prayers were intoned by the Rev. T. M. Remington, Vicar of Cloughton, Lancaster. The Psalms chosen for the day were the 19th, 33rd, and 122nd. These were set to single chants, the Cantate to a double chant, by Lawes, and the Deus to a single one by Haverall. The anthem was "Blessing and Glory" (Dr. Boyce); hymn before the sermon, 169, Hymns Ancient and Modern, to the grand old tune of French, which dates from 1621. The hymn after the sermon was 335, taken from the Appendix to Hymns Ancient and Modern. The first and second lessons were read by the Rev. Canon Hubbersty, and the Rev. Mr. Kirby, Vicar of Havertwaite, respectively. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Canon Ware, of Kirkby Lonsdale. Great praise is due to Mr. Lamb, the organist, and to Mr. Bather, the choir-master.

CAPE TOWN.—The Festival of the Confession of Augsburg was celebrated in the Evangelical Lutheran Church, Strand Street, on the 28th June. A special choir, under the able direction of Mr. J. H. Ashley, effectively performed the following musical selections during the services: Morning Service—full anthem, "Sing forth the honour of His name," Courtnay; recitative, "Comfort ye my people;" aria, "Every valley," Handel; aria, "Thou shalt bring them in," Handel; chorus, "Glory to God," Weber; anthem (quartet and chorus), "Blessed be Thou, O Lord," Hollingsworth. Evening Service—anthem, "O be joyful in the Lord," Crampton; recitative and aria, "Hear ye Israel," Mendelssohn; chorus, "Glory to God," Weber; chorus, "The Heavens are telling," Haydn. By request, the tenor solo, "Comfort ye," from Handel's Messiah, sung in the Morning Service, was repeated in the evening. Mr. J. B. Smithers presided at the organ. The Rev. W. F. Gohl preached morning and evening, when, in a very able discourse, he dwelt upon the bridal attire of the Christian Church. The collections at both services amounted to £35 10s.

JERSEY.—The first of the series of concerts announced by Mr. Milne, took place on the 3rd ult., in the Royal Hall, Peter Street, under the patronage of His Excellency Major General Norcott, C.B., Lieutenant-Governor. Mr. Nicholson, the eminent flute player, played the different morceaux which formed his contribution to the programme in his usual excellent manner. Madame Wells in "Lo! here the gentle lark" (Bishop), with flute obligato by Mr. Nicholson, Miss Maas in "The Storm" (Hullah), and Mr. Christian in "The Vagabond," were highly effective. The concert, in a musical sense, was very successful.

LEEDS.—Dr. Spark's Recital on the grand organ at the Town Hall, on Saturday evening the 8th ult., drew together a large and enthusiastic audience. Nothing could be more welcome to a miscellaneous company, the greater part of which are unable to appreciate Bach's preludes or fugues, than "The sweet bells of Ancona," in which the carillon stop, lately presented by the Mayor, was used to such purpose as to evoke a determined demand for an encore. Most effective, too, were Schumann's pieces, and Rossini's Overture to La Gazza Ladra, as well as Gounod's "Prière à Marie." Several eminent organists who were present not only expressed their great delight with the organ generally, but were especially pleased with the effect of the bells.

LIVERPOOL.—On Sunday afternoon the 2nd ult., the Synagogue of the New Hebrew Congregation, in Hope Place, was re-consecrated after having been painted and decorated. There was a large attendance of worshippers, and the ceremony was highly impressive and interesting. Several psalms were sung, amongst them, "I will extol Thee," to a melody composed by the Rabbi (Dr. Stern), and arranged and harmonised by Mr. J. J. Monk (who presided at the harmonium on the occasion); "Unto Thee I lift mine eyes," sung as a solo, and composed expressly for the ceremony by Mr. Monk; "Except the Lord build the house," sung by Dr. Stern as a solo; Psalm xliii. (composed expressly for the occasion, and for Dr. Stern as a solo, by Mr. Monk) the 29th Psalm sung to a melody by Naumberg; and Psalm xxiv. interspersed with solos for Dr. Stern. A sermon was afterwards preached by Dr. Stern. A curtain for the ark was presented by Mr. David Davies, of London; two stained glass windows were given by Mr. Saul Moss, and a covering for the ark was presented by Mr. Lewis Davies. The decorations are in delicate colours, interspersed with gold, the contractors being Messrs. Jelley and Hughes, of Slater Street. The chandelier, with which the building will now be illuminated, was supplied by Mr. A. Bucknall, of Renshaw Street.

OTLEY.—The eighth annual festival of the Otley Choral Union of Church Choirs was held on Saturday afternoon, 25th July. The performances this year are admitted to have been the best given by the Union since its commencement; and much of this success is due to the masterly style of Mr. Stables, of Kirkstall, who conducted. The number of chorists present was 177, consisting of the members of the following church choirs:—Arthington, Baildon, Guiseley, Horsforth, Woodside, Harrogate (St. Peter's), Kirkstall, Leathley, Otley, Yeadon, and Woodside (Wesleyans). At a quarter to three the singers assembled in the spacious workroom of Messrs. Walker and Son, printers (kindly lent for the occasion), and marched in procession to the church. When the procession reached the church door, the chorists commenced to sing Dean Alford's processional hymn. After the evening service had been read by the Rev. J. A. Seaton, of Cleckheaton, the Psalms for the day, the 32nd, 33rd, and 34th, were chanted, all being rendered in a most impressive manner. The Rev. Mr. Ashbridge, B.A., read the first lesson, and the Rev. Mr. Arthy, of Weston, the second lesson. The sermon was delivered by the Rev. J. M. Ashley, vicar of Fewstone, who selected for his text Revelation iv. 2, 3. The chorists then sang "Hark! the sound of holy voices chanting at the crystal sea." The Rev. Mr. Anderson, vicar of Otley, pronounced the benediction, and the chorists left the church singing "Light's abode, celestial Salem." The performance of Mr. Brown on the organ was admirable. A collection was taken at the close of the service towards defraying the expenses in connection with the festival, amounting to £15.

RYDE.—By special desire, and under distinguished patronage, Herr Schubert gave an evening concert on the 10th ult., at the Town Hall, when the following artists appeared: Madlle. Uhle, Miss Matilda Scott, Madame Barnett, Mr. Stedman, Mr. Thurlay Beale, Mr. H. Parker (pianoforte), Master Van Praag (violin), and Herr Schubert (violinello). Miss Scott created a decided effect, and was encored in her solo, "Twas within a mile;" Mr. Stedman's excellent tenor voice and cultivated style were advantageously displayed in the songs, "The anchor's weighed," and "Maid of Athens," which were enthusiastically re-demanded; and a similar compliment was paid to Mr. Thurlay Beale in both his songs. Madlle. Uhle and Madame Barnett also won well deserved applause, and Barnby's Part-song, "Sweet and low"—given as a Quartet—was one of the most effective pieces of the evening. Solos were well performed by Mr. Henry Parker, Master Van Praag and Herr Schubert, and the talents of the three artists were effectively united in a Trio. The concert gave the utmost satisfaction to a large audience.

SHEFFIELD.—On the 4th ult. Mr. Charles Harvey gave a concert and organ recital in the Albert Hall; vocalist, Miss Bolingbroke, violin, Mr. J. Peck, and organ, Mr. F. Archer. Mr. Peck played with his accustomed ability, and Mr. Archer in his fantasia on Scotch airs and a selection from Il Talismano, especially, gave great satisfaction, a concerto by the two instrumentalists being also given in a masterly style.—On the 6th ult. Mr. William Pyatt, of Nottingham, gave a concert, at which Miss Emma Beasley, Madame Williams, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Signor Foli were the vocalists, and Herr Otto Bernhardt solo violinist. The reception given to the artists was of a highly gratifying character. Mr. Sims Reeves sang "Adelaide" and "My Pretty Jane," in response to an encore for which he gave "Tom Bowling." Signor Foli, in the duet "All's Well," with Mr. Reeves, as well as in his songs, "The Diver," Piniotti's "Raft," and "The Vicar of Bray," sang magnificently. Miss Beasley, in "Bid me discourse," gave great satisfaction, and Madame Williams was encored for her rendering of "Huntingtower." Two solos by Herr Bernhardt were well-executed, and greatly appreciated. An excellent choir of 16 voices, under the direction of Mr. G. H. Smith, gave a good selection of part-songs in a most able manner. Mr. S. Naylor was accompanist.

SKELMORLIE.—On Tuesday evening, the 11th ult., an Organ Recital was given in the Parish Church, by Mr. John E. Senior, the organist. The programme, selected from the works of Bach, Weber, Beethoven, Spohr, Batiste, and Sir G. Elvey, was rendered in a highly satisfactory manner. Solos by Gounod, Handel, and Haydn were excellently sung by two amateurs.

TORONTO, CANADA.—The Philharmonic Society, under the able conductorship of Mr. F. H. Torrington, has during the last season given the Messiah twice, and Elijah three times. The next series of concerts will include the Creation, St. Paul, the Messiah, and probably Acis and Galatea, or Signor Randegger's Fridolin.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. F. H. Torrington (late of King's Chapel, Boston, U.S.), to the Metropolitan Chapel, Toronto, Canada.—Mr. W. J. Lamb, organist and choir-master to St. Patrick's Cathedral, and professor of music to St. Mary's College, Dundalk.—Mr. Walter Hermitage, organist and director of the choir to St. Mary's Church, Graham Street, Knightsbridge.—Mr. Jacob Bradford, Mus. Bac., Oxon., organist and director of the choir to St. Paul's, Paddington.—Mr. Alfred James Gosden to Lurgan Church, Westport, Co. Mayo.—Mr. S. E. Davies to St. Mary Magdalene's, Liverpool.—Mr. Alfred P. Standley, F.C.O., organist and music master to Rossall College, Fleetwood.—Mr. David Woodhouse to All Saints', Grosvenor Road, Piccadilly.—Mr. William J. Leask to Maberly Congregational Church, Kingsland.—Mr. J. H. Spinney to Sarum St. Edmund, Salisbury.

SACRED CANTATA.
"SUPPLICATION AND PRAISE."

BY
 R. SLOMAN, Mus. Doc., OXON.

Price 2s. 6d.

ORCHESTRAL PARTS COMPLETE.

From The Hour, June 20th, 1874.

"ALBERT HALL.—A very successful performance of a new Cantata, entitled 'Supplication and Praise,' by Dr. Sloman, was given on Wednesday last, in the Royal Albert Hall. The Choruses were sung by Mr. Carter's Choir, and the Solos sustained by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Signor Poli. Admirably instrumented for the orchestra, and written with a full knowledge of the capabilities of voices, Dr. Sloman's Cantata is a work which any musician might be proud of having produced. The Choruses, in fact, show the hand of a master, both in design and elaboration, whilst the vein of melody which runs through the Solos bears witness to a well-cultivated musical organisation. An air allotted to Madame Lemmens, and splendidly sung by that lady, was enthusiastically applauded and encored. A Tenor air, to the words, 'Teach me, O Lord,' sung by Mr. Vernon Rigby, and a Bass solo, 'Give ear, O Lord,' also met with great approval. Dr. Sloman was called for at the conclusion of the Cantata, and received an ovation which was justly due to him."

From The Standard, June 19th, 1874.

"The verdict of the audience was unquestionably in favour of the Cantata. The Composer, who conducted the work in person, was loudly and warmly applauded at the conclusion."

From The Orchestra, June 5th, 1874.

"There are Cantatas and Cantatas, and Composers with and without Chorus; and there are Composers who work well and conscientiously, and spare no pains to do that well which they think worthy of being done at all. Dr. Sloman has made his work a labour of love, and displayed an amount of thought and technical skill worthy of the highest praise. As instances, we may mention the double choruses (three in number), which occur in this Cantata, which are really so, and not merely in name. The Solos are melodious and full of character; a Chorus, which does double duty, is good and effective, and the whole work bears evidence to natural genius and acquired skill."

From The Orchestra, June 26th, 1874.

"'Supplication and Praise,' which we recently noticed, was performed at the Royal Albert Hall, on June 17th. Dr. Sloman's work more than deserves the commendation we bestowed upon it."

PRELIMINARY ANNOUNCEMENT.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL CONCERTS, EVERY EVENING.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER AND CO. beg to announce that, having made arrangements with the Council of the Royal Albert Hall, they will open that magnificent building for a series of Concerts on a scale of completeness and efficiency hitherto unattempted.

The performances will take place

EVERY EVENING,

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7.

In submitting the following comprehensive and, it is believed, unique scheme of operations, the Directors do not think it necessary to insist upon the advantages of the noble edifice in which the Concerts will take place. They may point out, however, that its unequalled dimensions will enable them to organize performances on the completest scale, and of the most imposing character, under conditions adapted to the means of every amateur. Erected for a national artistic purpose, the Royal Albert Hall will thus be fulfilling its mission in the strictest sense. The Directors also desire to draw attention to the fact that in the colossal organ which has, from the first, been one of the greatest attractions of the Hall, they have such means of illustrating an important branch of musical art as are available no where else. With this object, the most eminent English and foreign performers upon the "King of Instruments" will appear from time to time.

Recognising the many legitimate forms of music, and appreciating their relative value, the Directors have determined to make the Concerts representative in the widest sense, by comprising within their scheme the subjoined features:—

I.—Classical, Orchestral, and Vocal Music.

This department will include, not only works by the recognised "great masters," but also the compositions of those who stand next in order of merit, and whose undoubted genius has not yet met with adequate appreciation. Not only will an act of justice be thus attempted, but a considerable element of novelty will be secured. The Directors propose so to arrange the programmes, from time to time, as to illustrate particular periods in the history of Music, and in the career of illustrious Composers—such, for example, as the "three styles" of Beethoven. Prominence will also be given to the instrumental Solos which abound in the repertory of classical music; the most eminent artists of the day being engaged for their performance. The Concerts of Classical, Instrumental, and Vocal Music will take place on Wednesday evenings, under the direction of

II.—English Music.

The first portion of each Tuesday's programme will be devoted to Orchestral and other works by English composers, thus promoting, it is hoped, a wider and more adequate appreciation of native art. Encouragement to the production of such works is, just now, of particular value, and the Directors have resolved upon doing their utmost by inviting the best known English musicians to write specially for these Concerts. Another attractive feature will be the performance of Glees—perhaps, the most distinctively national style of English music—by a body of eminent vocalists, under the experienced direction of Mr. Montem Smith. The second part of the Tuesday programmes will contain Orchestral and Vocal selections, not exclusively English, chosen and arranged, as far as possible, to secure particular interest, historical and otherwise. In order that this important section of the scheme may receive undivided attention, the Directors have placed it under the efficient conductorship of

MR. JOHN FRANCIS BARNETT.

III.—Modern Orchestral Music.

The attention now claimed for works belonging to the modern and contemporary school, especially those of German origin, and the important influence such works are now exerting on every hand, have induced the Directors to set apart Friday evening in each week for their performance. Care will be taken to make the programmes thoroughly representative, and it is proposed to devote the second part of each to selections from the Operas, &c., of Richard Wagner, given in the most complete form allowed by concert-room exigencies. The Directors are happy to announce that the performances of Modern Orchestral Music will be under the direction of

MR. EDWARD DANNREUTHER.

IV.—Oratorio.

In any such scheme as the present, prominence must necessarily be given to those great musical epics, which have done so much to promote a love for true art among the English public. Performances of Oratorio will, therefore, take place every Thursday, on the same scale, and with the same completeness, as have distinguished the Concerts of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society in previous seasons. The direction of this branch of the enterprise is confided to the experience and skill of

MR. BARNBY.

V.—Songs, Ballads, Madrigals, &c.

These legitimate forms of the art will supply material for each Monday's programme, in association with popular Orchestral Compositions and Instrumental Solos of various kinds. Prominence will be given to Madrigals and Part-Songs; for the adequate rendering of which a special choir has been organised.

CONDUCTOR.—MR. BARNBY.

VI.—Ballet and other Popular Music.

It is proposed to make the Saturday performance as generally attractive and entertaining as possible, consistent with the character and aim of the enterprise as a whole. The programmes will, therefore, be largely devoted to Ballet and other Dance Music, popular Songs and Instrumental Solos by the most eminent artists, care being taken that everything performed shall represent the best of its kind.

CONDUCTOR.—MR. BARNBY.

The scheme, as above detailed, may be varied from time to time by the introduction of compositions for the Church, Operatic Selections, and other music, the claims of which ought not to be wholly ignored.

Analytical Programmes.

The Programme Books will whenever necessary, contain Analytical and Historical notes, specially written for these Concerts by

MR. JOSEPH BENNETT.

Further Particulars will shortly be announced.

HARMONIUMS! HARMONIUMS!
W. HATTERSLEY'S
CELEBRATED ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS, MANUFACTURED ONLY BY

W. HATTERSLEY and Co., 10 and 12, Bow-street, Sheffield.
These Instruments are superior to all other Makers, English or Foreign.

Every Instrument voiced and thoroughly tested before leaving the establishment by Mr. Wm. Hattersley.

These Instruments are manufactured from the very best, well-
seasoned Materials, in double veneered cases, and upon improved principles, and contain all the latest improvements invented by W.
Hattersley, and although the cost of their construction is thereby considerably increased, the fact of their being manufactured for their own retail sale only (and not for the trade), enables them to sell their Harmoniums at the same price as the ordinary and much inferior
Harmoniums sold by other music dealers.

Books of Designs and above 200 testimonials free by post or upon application.

Special attention is called to the DRAWING-ROOM MODELS,
full Organ Tone.

CAUTION.—Being in London, and finding that a number of imitations of my now celebrated SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS are offered to the public as the genuine Instruments, I think it due to the Musical Profession, Amateurs, and the Trade, to make the following statement:—Nine years ago, after much thought and labour, I succeeded in completing the short Grand, adopting the cross-string principle of Steinway, to lessen the size, and making many improvements in the sound-board and action; and it is well known to the musical world of Germany that I was the originator of these Pianos. Since that time additional improvements have been effected, the sale has gradually increased, and at the present time I have more than 250 workmen engaged exclusively on their manufacture. The acknowledged superiority of these Pianofortes to any other description of the same size has caused them to be closely imitated by various makers; and, in one instance, the name "Beethoven Grand," which I originally used as a distinctive trade mark, but have since abandoned, has been adopted; and with unexampled modesty, the public is now invited to accept the copy as the original, and to consider the genuine as spurious. Among the numerous testimonials I have received (including five medals), I may be permitted to mention that His Majesty the King of Saxony, who takes great interest in Art and Manufactures, and is in addition an excellent musician, honoured my manufactory with a visit on February 25th last, and was pleased to express his entire satisfaction. The Depot for my Pianofortes in London is at Mr. FLAYELL'S, 26, North Audley Street, W., where they may be seen in great variety.—ERNST KAPS, Sole Importer—CHARLES RUSSELL.

THE MUSICAL TIMES, AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

THE GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

BY HENRY C. LUNN.

THE encouragement and support which, as our readers know, we have always given to the Three Choir Festivals should, we think,—not only in the cause of charity, but in the interest of the spread of healthy art—be freely accorded by every musical journal. Were they merely monster gatherings, the attraction of which rested upon the fact of a guaranteed number of executants being assembled, under the control of a recognised Conductor from the metropolis, it might become a question whether the multiplication of such demonstrations in various parts of the country effected any real benefit to the progress of music; but it is precisely because they are not so that we feel inclined to do our utmost to perpetuate them. Much may be said respecting the local interest attaching to these time-honoured meetings—and our own experience has proved the truth of the assertion that very many of the residents in this part of the country have never heard the standard sacred works save at the Three Choir Festivals—yet there is a reason for their continuance which far outweighs any other that can be adduced, and this is the fact of their being given in a Cathedral instead of a Concert-room. The subdued and reverential feeling which it should be the mission of the great religious compositions to create, can never be so perfectly realised as amidst the sympathetic surroundings of these sacred temples. True it is that in the metropolis a more gigantic power is brought to bear upon the execution of these masterpieces; but the special feature we have dwelt upon is absent; and, instead therefore of urging those who have only heard an Oratorio in a Cathedral to attend a London performance, we would recommend those who have only heard a London performance to attend one in a Cathedral.

These preliminary observations are rendered additionally necessary at the present moment, for again is the continuance of the Three Choir Festivals threatened, and again does the chief opposition to them come from Worcester. All who trouble themselves to test the general opinion, must be aware that it is strongly in favour of non-interference in the present plan of conducting the Meetings; but Deans have unlimited power over Cathedrals; and if, in spite of the pressure from without, the use of a building which, as we have already said, is indissolubly bound up with the objects of the Festival, be refused in any one of the three Cities, we fear that these thoroughly English gatherings which have been zealously supported for upwards of a century and a half, not only by the most influential families of the neighbourhood but by a large portion of the local clergy, must fall, never to rise again.

No symptom of the conflict of opinions around us was perceptible, however, at Gloucester on the 8th ult., for the 151st meeting of the Three Choirs commenced in the Cathedral as quietly as if the three Deans had unanimously agreed to yield to the force of public opinion. At the morning service the regular choir was strengthened by those from Worcester and Hereford, but the sermon usually preached on the occasion was deferred until Friday evening. At one o'clock the first Cathedral performance began, the works selected for the morning being Spohr's Oratorio, "The Last Judgment," and Weber's Cantata, "The Praise of Jehovah," the latter an adaptation of the "Jubel Cantate," a work almost unknown in England. The perfect rendering of Spohr's music was the theme of universal admiration. Such exquisite chorus singing has indeed but rarely been heard; for the tone, rich and sonorous as it reached the ear, appeared so thoroughly under command that the minutest shade of feeling was expressed in every piece. Were we to name any choruses for especial commendation, we might select, "Praise His awful name," "Destroyed is Babylon," and the Choral part of "Blest are the departed," the latter of which created such a powerful effect upon the listeners as to make us long for the presence of those who oppose the Festival on the ground of its desecrating the sacred character of the building. The solos were given by Misses Edith Wynne and Antoinette Sterling, Mr. E. Lloyd and Signor Agnesi; Miss Wynne deserving the highest praise for her impressive delivery of the music which fell to her share—and especially for her singing of the duet, "Forsake me not," with Mr. Lloyd, which we scarcely ever heard go better.

Weber's "Jubel Cantate," now styled "The Praise of Jehovah," which followed the Oratorio, was composed in 1818 to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the accession of the King of Saxony, but was not performed on that occasion, owing most probably to the strong feeling in favour of Italian music at the Court, although other reasons are assigned. The original words were supplied by Friedrich Kind, author of the libretto of "Der Freischütz;" but English translators, regarding the intention of the composer as but of secondary importance, have provided us with two versions of the text, Mr. Hampden Napier calling it "The Festival of Peace"—in which form it was given at Weber's concert in London—and Mr. F. W. Rosier transforming it into a "Sacred Cantata," under the title which was presumed to justify its admission into the programme of the Gloucester Festival. But religious words, when sung to secular strains, will jar upon the feelings of all earnest listeners, even in a Concert-room; and we need scarcely say that in a Cathedral the incongruity is made still more apparent. Believing, therefore, that in justice to the composer, we should judge his work rather as the "Jubel Cantate" than "The Praise of Jehovah," we are inclined to give it a high place amongst the small number of compositions written to order which have survived the occasion for which they were designed. The music, although never rising to sublimity, is highly dramatic throughout, the variety of style in each movement keeping the attention constantly alive, and the excessive richness and originality of the instrumentation giving an indescribable beauty to the general effect of the work, especially when mentally united with the words to which Weber set the music. The opening Chorus is extremely fine, the bold diatonic harmonies assigned to the voices and the picturesqueness of the orchestration most appropriately glorifying the subject which the composer designs to illustrate. The trio for soprano, tenor and bass, to an accompaniment of stringed instruments pizzicato, the full choir entering pianissimo on the half bar, whilst the principal voices are sustained, has a charming effect; and there is much imposing grandeur in the climax of the movement, which is unquestionably, in a musical point of view, the finest in the work, although others may probably more catch the public ear. The Recitative and Air for tenor, preceded by a flute solo—excellently played by Mr. Radcliff—reminds us strongly of “Der Freischütz,” both in the voice part and instrumentation; but it is extremely vocal, and the melody, although not striking, is sufficiently attractive without the alterations which Mr. Bentham occasionally made, in order to show off his high notes. The Scena, for Soprano, which follows, failed to produce much effect, in spite of its fine rendering by Madlle. Titiens. Although thoroughly dramatic, it is somewhat laboured (with the exception of the short and impressive Andante), and certainly the words to which the last movement was sung were not calculated to enhance its welcome amongst the piously inclined of the audience. The Chorus (ushered in by a brief tenor Recitative) describing the gradual gathering of the tempest, is highly effective, the attraction of the piece being materially aided by the appropriateness of the instrumentation. A bass Recitative then introduces a duet for soprani, the entry of the Chorus, after a short interval, on a supplicating phrase of great beauty, adding much intensity to the prayer commenced by the two solo voices. The piece concludes with a falling dominant seventh for the trebles, leading, after a pause, into a bass solo, with chorus, which is admirably sustained throughout, and as far as we could judge, appeared to be much appreciated by the audience. Preceded by a bass Recitative, the Quartett, with Chorus, now occurs which we are told was enthusiastically encored when the Cantata was performed at the composer's concert. This we can readily imagine, for English audiences were not trained in 1826 to the comprehension of the higher class of music, and usually expressed their approbation, therefore, at the pieces which it required the smallest amount of trouble to understand. The florid soprano part of the Quartett reminds us of the brilliant displays written by the Italian composers for the prima donna of an Opera, the other vocalists being regarded merely as the meek attendants of the popular favourite. The passages are decidedly commonplace; but sung as they were on this occasion by Madlle. Titiens, there can be little wonder at the gratification they afforded to the many who were attracted rather by the artists than by the art. The final Chorus, which commences after a few recitatives for tenor and soprano, is extremely short; and, although well written, rather disappointing as a climax to a work of such pretension. In addition to the vocalists already named, mention must be made of Miss Griffiths, who has a good mezzo-soprano voice, and sang with excellent expression in the duet with Madlle. Titiens, and also of Mr. Lewis Thomas, who gave the bass music allotted to him with much effect. On the whole we believe that this Cantata contains so much that is really good, and moreover is so thoroughly characteristic of its composer's individuality, that after its resuscitation at this Festival there is little chance of its being again consigned to oblivion, and the thanks of all musicians, therefore, are due to Dr. Wesley for drawing attention to its many beauties.

The evening's performance in the Cathedral comprised the first and second parts of Haydn's “Creation” and Rossini's “Stabat Mater.” In the first work the solos were entrusted to Madlle. Titiens, Miss Edith Wynne, Mr. E. Lloyd and Mr. Lewis Thomas, all of whom acquitted themselves to perfection. Madlle. Titiens in “The marvellous work” and “With verdure clad,” and Miss Wynne in the air, “On mighty pens,” especially, delighting every listener. The principal singers in the “Stabat” were Madlle. Titiens, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Mr. Bentham, and Signor Agnesi. With the exception of Mr. Bentham, who sang flatly throughout the evening, no better exponents of Rossini's glowing composition could have been selected. So thoroughly operatic is the music that none but operatic singers can do it full justice; and after the brilliant duet, “Quis est homo,” the buzz of satisfaction was sufficiently audible to prove the intense pleasure of the audience. The choruses in both works were well given; and, with few exceptions the tempi of the various pieces were thoroughly satisfactory.

But little comment is necessary upon the performance of “Elijah” on the second morning of the Festival. Miss Edith Wynne took the whole of the principal soprano solos in the first part, and Madlle. Titiens those in the second part. Miss Antoinette Sterling, with a lovely contralto voice and thoroughly earnest style, has yet to rid herself of certain mannerisms which militate against her universal acceptance as an Oratorio singer. Her delivery of “O rest in the Lord” was slightly marred by, as it appeared to us, the very effort to make it effective, in proof of which we may say that much of the other music, which seemed to flow more spontaneously, produced a better impression upon the auditors. Mr. Bentham's solo, “Then shall the righteous,” in the second part, suffered materially by comparison with Mr. Lloyd's excellent rendering of “If with all your hearts,” in the first part; but he sang better in tune, and that was, at least, a real comfort to the listeners. Signor Agnesi's fine voice told with admirable effect in the music of the Prophet; but to us he appeared indisposed, and consequently much of the dramatic feeling of which we know he is possessed seemed wanting. In the pathetic parts, however, he was everything that could be desired, the impressive air, “It is enough,” especially, being most effectively rendered. A good word must be again said for Miss Griffiths, who lent efficient aid in some of the subordinate solos and concerted music; but the double Quartett—in which Mrs. Smith, Mr. Hunt, Mr. Poole and Mr. Merrick joined the principal vocalists—was by no means well sung. The fine training of the choir was again observable throughout the Oratorio; but the Chorus, “Thanks be to God”—the grand culminating point of the first part—was, as usual, interrupted by the frantic efforts of the Stewards to get ready for lunch: surely these gentlemen, who are so prominent in enforcing what they term “order” in the Cathedral, should feel that there is a reverence due to a sacred work, as well as to the building in which it is presented.

On Thursday morning Mendelssohn's “Lobgesang” and Rossini's “Messe Solennelle” were given. The instrumental movements in the first-named work were performed with a delicacy and precision scarcely ever equalled; the “Adagio religioso” gaining much in effect by being taken somewhat slower than we have been accustomed to hear it in the metropolis. Good as the chorus singing had been on the first two days of the Festival, we can scarcely call to mind anything so absolutely perfect as the manner in which the beautiful choral movements of Mendelssohn's work were rendered on this occasion. The subdued expression wherever the choir accompanied the principal voices contrasted admirably with the power and decision in the jubilant choruses, the soprani in the final movement, “Ye nations offer to the Lord,” ringing out the upper B flat with a clearness and certainty of intonation impossible to be overpraised. The soprano solos were excellently sung by Miss Edith Wynne and Miss Griffiths (who also gave with much effect the duet, "I waited for the Lord") and Mr. E. Lloyd again proved himself a genuine artist by his delivery of the tenor music, especially those intensely dramatic recitatives, "Watchman, will the night soon pass?"

The substitution of so perfectly trained a choir as that assembled at this Festival, for the coarse Italian singers who were first entrusted with the exacting choruses of Rossini's "Messe Solennelle" in St. James's Hall in 1869, was certainly a vast improvement; but we like the work no better than we did on a first hearing. The "Stabat Mater," in spite of its undoubted operatic character, is taken to heart, both by vocalists and listeners, on account of the excessive beauty of its melody; but in the "Messe Solennelle" Rossini, in attempting to escape from the secular, has not succeeded in arriving at the sacred, style, and the consequence is that the conflict between two opposing schools is obviously stamped upon every movement in the work. When the Mass was first heard in England we frankly recorded our conviction of the truths we have now stated; and although this opinion differed from that of most of our contemporaries, it appears to us that Time has already endorsed the justice of our remarks. As we have already said, the choir did ample justice to the whole of the choruses—the difficult "Cum sancto spiritu," with its thoroughly "Rossinian Fugue," being especially well sung—and the principal solo vocalists, Madlle. Titiens, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Mr. Bentham and Signor Agnesi, gave the solos with much effect, Mr. Bentham doing more justice to himself than he had hitherto been enabled to do in the music allotted to him in the Cathedral.

The "Messiah" on Friday morning, the last day of the Festival, attracted, as usual, a large audience. The chorus singing in this work was again a conspicuous feature, "And He shall purify," "For unto us a child is born" (the latter being taken so fast as to make the execution of the passages extremely difficult) the "Hallelujah" and the final Chorus, "Worthy is the Lamb," affording conclusive evidence of the admirable manner in which the choir had been prepared. The principal singers were Madlle. Titiens, Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Griffiths, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Bentham, Mr. Lewis Thomas and Signor Agnesi.

At the services in the Cathedral on the mornings of the Festival week, the only living composer represented was Dr. Wesley; and this was again the case at the service on Friday evening, when his Anthem, "Praise the Lord, oh, my soul," was given. The special sermon, preached by Canon Barry, was as direct an attack upon the manner in which the Festivals had been recently conducted as could be well made from a pulpit. Some few Oratorios, which he named, were, he said, well suited for performance in a Cathedral, and we were therefore left to infer that others were not. The tendency of his discourse was undoubtedly to urge upon his hearers the advisability of reverting to the original object of these Meetings, which, as he said, was to cultivate sacred music, and to improve, through the aid of music, the worship of God. If the service of that evening were to be taken as any specimen of what the future Festivals are to be, we tremble for the poor widows and orphans for whose benefit they are carried on, for assuredly more slovenly singing we have rarely heard within the walls of a Cathedral.

The secular concerts on Wednesday and Thursday evenings in the Shire Hall, were in many respects exceedingly attractive. At the first a very good selection from Mozart's Opera, "Don Giovanni," was given, which displayed to much advantage the talents of the principal vocalists engaged at the Festival. We may also mention that Miss Antoinette Sterling seemed here on firmer ground than in the Cathedral, her singing of three German songs, by Schubert, Schumann and Mendelssohn respectively, and also of the old ballad, "The three ravens," creating a marked effect upon the audience. A welcome item in the programme was the performance of the Adagio and Rondo from Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto, by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, who was warmly greeted on her appearance, and recalled to the platform at the conclusion of the piece by an audience apparently thoroughly appreciating her refined and intellectual rendering of this great work. Mr. Carrodus's playing of Ernst's violin Fantasia on "Otello" was also a grand success; and Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, which commenced the second part, was much applauded. At the second concert Mendelssohn's Overture to the "Midsummer Night's Dream" played the people into their seats; and as the whole of the music to the play followed, a good opportunity was given to the Stewards and their friends for light conversation before the anxiously expected solos commenced, a privilege of which they availed themselves to the utmost extent. The selection from "Oberon," in the second part, enabled us to hear one of the finest renderings of the Scena, "Ocean! thou mighty monster," by Madlle. Titiens, ever given either on or off the stage, the last note being the signal for a burst of applause which seemed fairly to overwhelm the vocalist. Amongst the miscellaneous songs we may mention the intelligent singing of Miss Griffiths in Gounod's "Quando a te lieta," which was encored, and the refined interpretation of two of Dr. Wesley's songs, by Miss Sterling, accompanied on the piano-forte by the composer. An Andante and Rondo Capriccioso, by David, was finely played on the violin by M. Sainton, and applauded most enthusiastically, a compliment due alike to his finished performance of this piece and his unwearied exertions as leader of the orchestra during the Festival. The concert concluded with "Rule Britannia" and the National Anthem, in both of which Madlle. Titiens sang the solos.

In considering the principal features of this Meeting—which promises to be the one from which we may date either the decline or the more permanent establishment of these interesting gatherings—one or two subjects strike us as worthy of attention, more especially as on all sides we have heard them debated during the Festival. In the first place we believe that influence has been at work in the selection of the vocalists; for, without mentioning names, we see some passed over who ought to have been engaged, and some engaged who ought to have been passed over. This must be remedied in future, if the good opinion of competent judges is worth securing; and that it is so should we think be apparent to all who see how the weak points in the general management may, at the present moment, be seized upon as a reason for dissatisfaction. Then, with regard to the local Conductor, we may at once say that, in spite of certain short-comings, our conviction that the plan which has been successfully pursued for so many years is the right one, remains unshaken. We know that there have been occasional "slips," but without hesitation can affirm that, under more experienced Conductors, we have heard quite as many. The music at the present Festival has gone almost uniformly well—indeed the rendering of some works has been the finest within our recollection—and we congratulate Dr. Wesley most heartily upon a result which we cannot but consider is mainly owing to his zeal and energy in the cause. Respecting the production of novelty at these country Festivals, we have also a word to say. The constant cry for “new works” is one in which we have never heartily joined. Next to the universally accepted creations of the great composers, which are always cordially welcomed by a large majority of the audience, we would earnestly recommend those which, although signed by names offering a sufficient guarantee for their excellence, have been allowed, from some unexplained cause, to remain in obscurity. Only students who, undeterred by the much lauded novelties around them, seek merely for what is of real artistic value, can be aware of the many gems which have been unaccountably thrown aside; and it is their duty, as it should be their pleasure, to urge upon those invested with power the advisability of bringing such treasures before the general public. We have no desire to discourage the efforts of rising composers, but great Festivals should be devoted to great works; and, although the compositions of writers who have earned a high reputation might be admitted, after trial, in the programme, we cannot be made to believe that it is either an artistic or a politic step to ignore the existence of old works by men of genius in order to give a “commission” for a new one, the merit of which is first to be tested at its public performance.

We have now only to award a line of praise to Mr. Townshend Smith, who presided at the organ during the Cathedral performances in the morning, and to Mr. Done, who ably accompanied some of the vocal music on the pianoforte at the evening concerts. We are glad to find that the Festival collections amounted, with the subscriptions of the Stewards, to upwards of a thousand pounds; and sincerely hope that so excellent and legitimate a method of providing for the widows and orphans of the poorer clergy may continue to receive that powerful aid which alone can ensure its stability.

IN the August number of the Musical Times, we gave a list of the principal works to be performed at the Liverpool Musical Festival, which began on the 29th ult., with every prospect of unequalled success. At the Leeds Festival, which commences on the 14th inst., the vocalists engaged are Madlle. Titiens, Madlle. Singelli, Madame Alvsleben, Madlle. Trebelli-Bettini, Madame Patey, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Bentham, Signor Campanini, Signor Giulio Perkins, Signor Agnesi and Mr. Santley. The salient points of the programmes appeared in our July number; but we are glad to find that, in addition to the works there named, Schumann's Cantata, “Paradise and the Peri,” is to be given at one of the evening concerts. Respecting the appointment of Mr. Broughton as Chorus-Master, in place of Mr. R. S. Burton, we have received a pamphlet from the latter gentleman, in which a detailed account of his differences with the Committee is given. At the commencement of this he says, with reference to the letter which he received cancelling his appointment, “I made up my mind not to take any notice of it at present, as I did not wish in any way, to interfere with the success of the Festival.” We much regret that he did not adhere to this resolution.

AN article in a recent number of the North British Daily Mail, calls attention to a fact which cannot be too widely known, viz., that whilst the Report of the Privy Council on Elementary Education in England contains several separate and independent statements of the progress of music in Schools, the Report on Education in Scotland does not even mention the subject. Considering, as the writer of this article says, that although ignored by the several Inspectors whose reports are published, many schools in various parts of Scotland have been examined in vocal music, and the result of the inspection has been the gaining of the full grant of One shilling per scholar, the omission of any allusion to so important a branch of Education in the “Scottish Blue Book” appears somewhat singular. Into the superior merits of the Tonic sol-fa method, as opposed to that of Mr. Hullah—so prominently set forth in the article to which we have alluded—it is no part of our intention now to enquire; but we are decidedly of opinion that the matter is of too much importance to be passed over.

We think it very questionable whether M. Hervé attributes the failure of his “Ashantee Symphony,” to the education of the people or to their want of it. For ourselves, it is a matter of much satisfaction to think that a “Promenade” audience will no longer listen to those descriptive military pieces which proved so attractive in the days of the late M. Jullien. Were the rage for such compositions to obtain, it would materially stimulate the efforts of those who advocate National arbitration; for assuredly one of the greatest blessings of peace, to musicians at least, is the absence of any encouragement to write “War Symphonies.”

THE Prospectus of the Brixton Choral Society announces four concerts during the season 1874-5, at which the following works will be performed:—The Rev. Sir F. A. G. Ouseley's Oratorio, “St. Polycarp,” J. F. Barnett's Cantata, “Paradise and the Peri,” G. A. Macfarren's Oratorio, “St. John the Baptist,” Spohr's Oratorio, “Calvary,” and Handel's Oratorio, “Saul.” The Society is, as usual, under the conductorship of Mr. William Lemare, who has for so many years proved himself a most able guardian of its interests.

THE Monthly Concert of the St. George's Glee Union was given at the Pimlico Rooms on the 4th ult. The choral portion of the programme included the “Macbeth” music, “Sir Knight,” “Softly fall,” “Fairy Song,” and “Good Night, Farewell.” Miss Horder, Miss Janet King and Mr. Thurley Beale were very successful in a number of well-known songs. The programme also comprised songs by Mr. Beaumont and Mr. Ellis, a pianoforte solo by Miss Clara Buley, a violin solo by Mr. F. Augarde, and a clarionet solo by Mr. E. Augarde.

THE Prospectus of the Nineteenth series of Saturday Concerts at the Crystal Palace is unquestionably one of the most interesting yet issued; and, as—unlike those promising announcements of the Italian Opera season—the pledges are usually fully redeemed, the music-loving public may confidently rely upon hearing, during the twenty-five performances promised, not only some of the best standard compositions, but many which have never before been given in this country. Among the works selected for performance are the following:—Bach's Sacred Cantata, “My spirit was in heaviness,” for Solo Voices, Chorus, and full Orchestra; Suite for Orchestra in C—both for the first time; Handel's “Allegro and Penseroso,” with additional accompaniments by R. Franz—first time; Two Symphonies by Haydn—both first time; Mozart's Adagio and Fugue in C, for Orchestra, Violin Concerto in D (both first time), and Jupiter Symphony; Schubert's Grand Symphony in C, No. 9; Overture and Selection from the Operetta of the “Zwillingsbrüder” (1819); “Die Allmacht,” song (Op. 79), adapted by Liszt for Male Chorus and grand Orchestra—both first time; Beethoven's

Mass No. 1 in C; Symphonies Nos. 1, 2, and 8—being those not played last season—with others of the Nine; Mendelssohn's Psalm xcv., for Solos, Chorus, and Orchestra—first time; the Reformation and Italian Symphonies; Schumann's Symphony in C, and the Manfred music; Weber's Jubilee Cantata, for Solos, Chorus, and Orchestra—first time; Spohr's Symphony No. 1, in E flat—first time; Hiller's Dramatic Fantasia, for full Orchestra; Gade's "Spring Fantasia" (Frühlings Fantaisie), for Pianoforte, Orchestra, and Solo Voices—first time; Joachim's Violin Concerto in G—first time; Brahms's Serenade for small Orchestra, the "Hungarian dances," arranged by the composer for full Orchestra—all for the first time; the Pianoforte Concerto; R. Wagner's "A Faust Overture"—first time; Selection from Lohengrin; Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto, No. 2 (in A)—first time; Rubinstein's Overture to Dimitri Donskoi—first time; Raff's "Lenore" Symphony, No. 5 (in E)—first time; Lachner's Suite, No. 6, for full Orchestra—first time; Sir W. S. Bennett's Symphony in G minor; P.F. Concerto, No. 4; Sir Julius Benedict's New Symphony, No. 2, in C—first time; G. A. Macfarren's New Violin Concerto (G minor)—first time; Henry H. Pierson's Overture, "Romeo and Juliet"—first time; Alfred W. Holmes's "Jeanne d'Arc," for Solos, Chorus, and Orchestra—first time; Rev. Sir F. A. G. Ouseley's "Hagar," an Oratorio—first time; a Selection from Sullivan's "Land and Sea"—first time; with works by J. F. Barnett, H. Holmes, H. Gadsby, and other English Composers. The artists already engaged are Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Alvsleben, Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Patey, Miss Sterling, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Santley, Signor Agnesi, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. Lloyd, Signor Foli, Madame Schumann, Madame Norman-Neruda, Madame Essipoff, Miss Marie Krebs, Herr Joachim, Mr. Wieniawski, Mr. Carrodus, Mr. Charles Hallé, Herr Pauer, Herr von Bülow, Mr. Franklin Taylor, Mr. Dannreuther and Signor Piatti. Everybody will be gratified to find that Mr. Manns retains his post of conductor. The first concert is announced for the 10th inst.

WE are informed that Miss Emily Tate (the pianist) has lately been playing before the Court at Osborne; and, in recognition of her talent, has been presented by H.R.H. the Princess Beatrice with a splendid gold watch, set with diamonds.

WE extract the following paragraph from the Times of the 22nd ult.:—"On Saturday last the first meeting of the Worcester Committee of Stewards of the Festivals of the Three Choirs was held at Worcester. The Mayor of Worcester, Mr. Goldingham, presided, and Lord Hampton (who takes great interest in the continuance of these triennial meetings) was present. According to the usual order, next year's festival will be held at Worcester, and hence the meeting at Worcester on Saturday. The meeting was with closed doors. Although two hours were occupied in debate, the only tangible result was the instruction of the Hon. Secretary (the Rev. T. L. Wheeler), to make the usual application to the bishop of the diocese to allow himself to be nominated president, according to precedent in such cases. When the reply is received in the affirmative (as it is hoped and expected to be), the next step will be a formal application to the Dean and Chapter of Worcester to allow the use of the cathedral for the oratorios. Their decision will be awaited with some anxiety. Dr. Barry, one of the Chapter of Worcester, who, it will be remembered, preached the festival sermon at Gloucester at the close of the late festival, has just caused his sermon to be printed. He has also written an appendix in explanation of his opinions on the subject of holding the festivals in the cathedrals. After glancing at the chief grounds of objection raised to the old and the existing system, he proceeds to explain the scheme which he would substitute for the present one. He then applies himself to the arguments which he is aware would be raised to his scheme. First, as to the funds. He acknowledges at once that they could not hope to engage the greatest artists. 'We could not afford to pay £350 to one singer, and £250 to another; we must dispense with some of the accomplished instrumentalists who now come down from London; we could no longer make our cathedral rival in this respect the Crystal Palace or Exeter Hall.' But he has no fears that the charity will materially suffer. In conclusion, he does not see why the action of Worcester in this matter need necessarily determine that of Gloucester or Hereford; and he adds:—"The request for the use of the cathedral in 1875 will, I understand, be made almost immediately, and will, of course, receive the most careful and respectful consideration from the Dean and Chapter. Whatever the issue of that consideration may be, it is clear that some offence must be given to one or other of the parties opposed to each other on this vexed question."

THE Third Annual Dinner to the Choir of St. James's, Clerkenwell, given by Mr. T. Hastings Miller (organist), took place on Friday, August 28th, at the Crown Hotel, Broxbourne. Messrs. Culver and Goad, Churchwardens, and the Rev. J. H. Rose, Curate of the Parish Church, were also present. Mr. T. Hastings Miller occupied the chair, and the Rev. J. H. Rose the vice-chair. The usual toasts were given, and some vocal music was well executed by the choir.

THE Plymouth Vocal Association, under the honorary conductorship of Mr. F. N. Löhr, announces the following works for performance during the coming season:—Handel's "Messiah" and "Judas Maccabæus," Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist," and Cummings's "Fairy Ring."

THE sale of tickets for the Leeds Musical Festival is proceeding very satisfactorily. On the first day for purchasing single tickets there was quite a rush for an early selection of seats. According to present indications, Friday morning is the most popular, when Macfarren's "John the Baptist" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" are to be performed.

AT the Harvest Festival at St. Mary's, Haggerstone, on Sunday evening the 13th ult., the spacious church was crowded with an attentive auditory. The music consisted of Tallis's Responses, H. Smart's Service in F, Goss's Anthem, "Fear not, O Land," Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus," and Processional Hymns, Ancient and Modern, Nos. 223 and 360. The whole was finely rendered by St. Mary's Choir. Mr. W. R. Coventry presided at the organ, and played a selection of well chosen voluntaries after the service with his usual ability.

AT the conclusion of Evensong on St. Matthew's Day, the gentlemen of the Choir of St. Matthew's Church, Upper Clapton, presented William Cockell, Esq., with an ivory bâton and two volumes of Dr. Greene's Anthems, in appreciation of his valuable services as Honorary Director of the Choir, coupled with the hope that he might long continue to retain his office, and maintain the Choir in its present state of efficiency.

REVIEWS.

CHAPPELL AND CO. AND SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & CO.

The History of Music (Art and Science). Volume I. From the Earliest Records to the Fall of the Roman Empire. By W. Chappell, F.S.A.

WHILE the "Music of the Future" has of late been commanding the attention of at least a great portion of the musical public, Mr. William Chappell has directed his thoughts and researches towards the Music of the Past. But, whereas the ideal of our modern so-called reformers is to be realised in the resuscitation of the drama of ancient Greece, we question whether modern musical art will be greatly influenced by facts brought to light, concerning the systems of music prevalent among the ancients. Many a lover of the art, eager for information on the subject, has turned away from it, confused and disheartened, on reading such accounts as are to be found in the Histories of Sir John Hawkins and Dr. Burney, or in Boëthius' elaborate, but hopelessly abstruse, work "De Institutione Musica." Dr. Burney, indeed, at the very outset casts a gloom over the subject, calling it "a dark and difficult" one, that had "foiled the most learned men of the two or three last centuries." There were, however, not wanting writers of a more enthusiastic disposition who, not being encumbered by any real knowledge of the subject, and, consequently, in a position to let their imagination have full play, spoke of the music of the ancient Greeks as something far surpassing in sublimity anything which modern art could produce. The truth is that, old as the cultivation of music, as art and science, may be, the study of its history is of comparatively recent date. The above-named works of Hawkins and Burney are, in fact, little more than copious collections of historical material, valuable chiefly, when relating to periods immediately preceding that in which they wrote. Since the appearance of these works the number of detail-studies has vastly increased. The last fifty years have laid open to Egyptian scholars a mass of inscriptions and monuments, which leave no doubt whatever of the cultivation, in an advanced state, of music among that ancient nation. On the other hand the correctness of interpretation of Greek authors upon music, on the part of Boëthius, Meibomius and others, has long been questioned by German scholars, who have published a number of essays bearing on the point. Thus there is an enormous quantity of material awaiting the sifting hand of the historian, who would combine in himself the qualities of a good musician and sound scholar—who would have the courage to abandon leading strings, to follow which had been the easy task of former compilers.

Mr. Chappell possesses all these qualities, and in no common degree. His exposition is throughout lucid, and his arguments perfectly legitimate. His manner of going to work at once enlists our sympathies. Discarding all pseudo-authority, wherever it offers information at second hand, he turns at once, as a true student of history, to the source. Wading again through the treatises of Plato and Aristotle, aided by a general knowledge of music, which the savant Boëthius for instance never possessed, he is enabled to arrive at interpretations which, in some cases, throw an entirely new light upon the subject of the Greek systems. It is, of course, impossible to give anything like a fair resumé of the views expounded in this important volume, within the limited space of a review. We must content ourselves with just touching upon one or two of the main features.

Ex Oriente Lux; to Egypt Mr. Chappell traces the origin, not only of the Greek octave system in its perfection, but of harmony itself. There is, indeed, a decided tendency among a portion of modern scientific men, to look for the roots of all the most important elements of our knowledge and civilisation in the East. We are not prepared to deny the existence of some kind of harmony, even among a nation at whose musical capacities we can guess merely by the variety and construction of their musical instruments, as represented by their artists. But supposing the painters of that period to have made the accuracy of detail a special study, we do not quite see, why a painting, representing three Egyptian flute players performing on flutes of different lengths, should be "a proof, amounting to demonstration," of the use of harmony among the founders of the Pyramids. We feel more en rapport with our author, when he deals with the Greek octave system, which, he thinks, was introduced into Greece from Egypt in the seventh century B.C. This explanation and reconstruction, as it were, of the Greek scales, is indeed among the chief merits of Mr. Chappell's book. It is perfectly plausible, and backed up by sound and solid reasonings. It shows the Greek system to have possessed a vitality, and, to some extent, an elasticity, which in itself constitutes prima facie evidence of the use of harmony within its limits. There is, however, more direct proof than this, and here we cannot do better than quote Mr. Chappell's admirable translation of a passage in the Laws of Plato, as bearing directly on the question. "Both the player on the Kithara and the learner," says Plato, "ought to avail themselves of the sound of the lyre, for the sake of the exactitude of its notes, to play in unison with the voice, note for note. But, as for playing different passages and flourishes upon the lyre, when the notes for the instrument vary from those intended for the voice—or, when close intervals of the chromatic and enharmonic scales are opposed to the wider intervals of the diatonic—also, when there are quick to slow, or high to low notes, thus making varied harmony, or running together in octaves. And in like manner, as to adapting the manifold diversities of rhythm to the notes of the lyre, it is unnecessary that all these things should be learned by those who have to acquire a serviceable knowledge of the art and science of music within three years, on account of the speed that is demanded—for opposite principles, confusing one another, cause slowness in learning." "Three years," the translator justly adds, "would not have been required only to learn to accompany the voice in unison with the lyre." There is, however, no attempt on the part of Mr. Chappell to define the extent to which harmony was practised in ancient Greece, and, unfortunately, the only remnant of melodies of unquestioned Greek origin is not calculated to create a high opinion of the music of the period to which they belong. The three hymns, dedicated respectively to Calliope, to Apollo, and to Nemesis, which were first timed and barred by Burette in 1720, and afterwards re-printed with slight modifications, by Burney, Forkel and others, are here published with Mr. Chappell's notions of the rhythmical arrangement of syllables; two of them having been harmonised by Mr. G. A. Macfarren. It may, however, be fairly questioned, whether the result is Greek music. That, in spite of the difficulties Dr. Burney encountered in the matter, these melodies can be harmonised, does not, indeed, prove very much, seeing that the airs of the most savage nations are susceptible of harmony. But, by making such tunes form part of a modern tissue of harmonies, they become an essentially modern piece of music. Besides, if it be true that these remains of Greek music were originally harmonised, are we quite sure, presuming the parts to have been written separately, that they represent really a melody, and not a portion of the original harmony?—A good deal of space in Mr. Chappell's work is, of course, occupied by a descriptive account of the musical instruments of the ancients. This is not the least valuable portion of the book, and one replete with interest even to the amateur, who cares little about the Greek octaves, and who may, perchance, consider the above-mentioned hymns very harmless specimens of art indeed. Glancing at the admirable illustrations of a variety of instruments, which abound in this volume he will regret being unable to call into life again the hand which made them speak; he will long for an air, sung by "a Greek maiden, accompanying her voice upon the lyre or other instrument of the harp kind" which, according to Mr. Chappell, "could hardly be distinguishable from the minor airs of modern Europe." How soon it would settle all controversy, clear away all difficulties! As it is, we have to content ourselves with reading aright the Greek writers concerning the theory of the art in their days; to listen, as it were, with our eyes, in determining the musical capacities of the many instruments of sound of which representations have been handed down to us. To shape these materials into anything like a consistent whole, is indeed an arduous task, and Mr. Chappell has proved himself fully equal to it. Inasmuch as a "History of Music" should be a sympathetic and comprehensive picture of the position occupied by the art at a given period, showing how far it penetrated the national and social life of a people, such a history, as regards the ancients, has yet to be written. But Mr. Chappell's book will, we think, prove the groundwork for such a future historical picture. He has had to remove a mountain of misconceptions and misrepresentations on the part of those, who spoke with supposed authority, before he could prove that the subject with which he was dealing is not such a "dark and difficult" one after all.

NOVELLO, EWER AND Co.

The Pilgrimage of the Rose. Cantata; founded on a Poem by Moritz Horn; the English adaptation by Miss Louisa Vance. The music composed for Solo Voices, Chorus and Orchestra, by Robert Schumann.

HOWEVER opinions may differ as to the value of the more important works of Schumann, there can be no question that in his Cantatas there is a vitality which must ensure for them an undying popularity. His "Paradise and the Peri" is growing rapidly in the estimation of all good judges in this country; and when the "Pilgrimage of the Rose" shall have become more extensively known, an equal result may be confidently anticipated. The poem upon which the Cantata is founded, by Moritz Horn, is one especially suited to inspire the genius of Schumann; and in its English form, the beauty of the original is so well preserved that we can scarcely imagine the music not to have been written to the words. A Rose—so runs the story—hearing youths and maidens singing of love, sighs to be a mortal, and the Queen of the Fairies grants her wish by changing her into a beautiful maiden, giving her, at the same time, a magic rose which she is to retain in her possession, or at once forfeit her human existence and return to her former state. A grave-digger, who is preparing a grave for a young girl, tells her a sad tale of blighted love, and a dirge being sung around the grave, the poor Rose mingles her voice with those of the mourners. Adopted by the parents of the maiden whose funeral she has witnessed, a forester falls in love with and marries her. When she becomes a mother, her earthly mission is fulfilled, and, placing the rose in the hand of her child, she is borne away by angels. The opening Chorus, for female voices, is extremely beautiful, a charmingly melodious Canon on the octave giving an additional interest to a movement which is replete with effect. The tenor solo, with which is interwoven a Chorus of Fairies, is an admirably dramatic piece of writing, the flowing melody for the single voice being skilfully contrasted with the sparkling elfish chorus and its delicate accompaniment of semiquavers. The whole of the next movement, in which the Rose, the Fairy Queen and the Fairy Choir take part, is well sustained; and the sudden change of key at once removes us to the regions where the Rose-maiden is destined to commence her mortal life. The tenor voice—to which is assigned the continuation of the story when the characters are not themselves singing—now proclaims the breaking of day, and Rosa, awaking as if from a dream, ascends a hilly path, and is turned away from a cottage where she begs for shelter. All these incidents have a sympathetic musical colouring which cannot be too highly praised; the duet with the cottager, especially, being excellently treated. No. 7 contains some of the most effective music in the Cantata, a beautiful enharmonic modulation from A flat to E major introducing Rosa's first question to the grave-digger—"For whom this grave so small, so deep?"—and the contrast between the two characters throughout the scene being admirably preserved. The long holding notes of the dirge—in which Schumann is bold enough to show us that two consecutive fifths between the soprano and bass may have a fine effect—with the solo of Rosa occasionally stealing in, is deeply pathetic. Then, after a musical dialogue and a short Prayer for Rosa, a very original Chorus of Fairies occurs, the theme of which, with its characteristic accompaniment, will no doubt make it a general favourite. This ends the first Part. Some conversational passages commence the second Part, which are broken by a brief, but melodious duet for Soprano and Contralto; then, after a Tenor solo, we have a fine Hunting Chorus, in which an effective use is made of the horns. As a Part-song, even detached from the Cantata, we imagine that this piece must make its way in the concert-room. The next important number is a love-duet between Rosa and the young Forester, the simple beauty of which is aided by a flowing triplet accompaniment. This is followed by a short Chorus, a Bass solo, and a duet for Soprano and Contralto, and then occurs an excellently written five-part Chorus, the effect of which would no doubt be much heightened by the orchestral parts, prominent use being evidently made of the wind instruments. The double pedal commencing No. 22 gives the true pastoral character to this beautiful and highly dramatic movement; then some melodious phrases for Soprano and Tenor lead into the final Angelic Chorus, for Soprani and Alt, which has a graceful theme, with a delicate triplet accompaniment throughout. We can scarcely imagine that so exquisite a work as this will long be allowed to remain in obscurity. Choral Societies will consult their interest by placing it at once in the programme of the coming season, and amateurs may rest assured that, as a drawing-room Cantata, with Pianoforte accompaniment, its success is certain.

Te Deum Laudamus in G. A Village Te Deum. Composed by T. Richard Matthews, B.A.

THIS has the merit we have commended in some other settings of the Canticles, of reflecting the sense of some passages on the text of other passages, by repetition of the music to which the earlier are sung, and so giving greater force to the words, and far greater interest to the music, than either can have when phrase after phrase is fitted always to new matter. The music of the opening recurs, for instance, at "Thou art the King," showing that to set forth the Divine glory is an act of praise; and again at "Day by day," renewing the original idea of the hymn at the outset of its last section, appropriately to the identity of praising and magnifying. A good incident is the modulation into C, which gives brightness to the declaration, "Thou didst open the kingdom of heaven." The modulations that follow, into A flat, into D flat minor, into F minor, into G minor, into A minor, and into B major, are some of them irrelevant to the original key of G, and the course, if practicable to village choristers, can scarcely be comprehensible by village audiences. The piece is to be sung principally in unison, the heavenly song being distinguished from the rest by the vocal harmony to which it is set. It is simply and correctly harmonised, and is certainly to be regarded as a work of merit.

Te Deum. Harmonised on the seventh and first Gregorian tones by Edgar Adams.

THE monotony of the manifold repetitions of the Plain Song is ingeniously relieved by the varied counterpoint for voices as well as for organ in this arrangement. Another and a very good variety of effect is made by the change of key, from G to E flat, for the verses beginning, "When Thou tookest upon Thee," and this induces another contrast when the original key is resumed, at "Day by day." The skilful author has made a slip in allowing himself the richness of the B flat in the chord of the augmented 6th on E flat, which goes, in 5ths with the bass, to A in the ensuing chord of D, and this he will surely amend when the work is reprinted. If a certain class of the clergy will have what they choose to call Gregorian music in their churches, in defiance of musical taste and historical consistency, they will do far better to let it be accompanied with such harmonies as are here given, than with the chromatic chords that are set to it by some arrangers, in exposure of their own contrapuntal inability, and in direct opposition to the character of the melodies.

Te Deum Laudamus. Composed by William Taylor, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

THIS piece is composed for "Parish choirs and choral festivals," and so, in its variable use, the old axiom is reversed, for the lesser includes the greater—that is, being practised by parish choirs, many of these may gather together and sing it at a festival. We cannot say much in its recommendation, and our one little word is—easy—which is of serious importance to single and manifold parishes. It is not incorrectly written, and this too, is saying something, when the difficulty is considered of writing what is facile for performance. The multitude of settings of the Canticles that are now in course of almost daily issue, is marvellous; there must be enough in circulation to furnish a separate composition for every church in the kingdom. Were all of high merit, it would be impossible to select sufficiently few for average purposes, and fortune is therefore to be thanked for sending some specimens that rise not above mediocrity.

A Short Festival Setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis. By J. Stainer.

THIS service was written for the Anniversary of the Sons of the Clergy in 1873, and it tells well for the energy of the chief musician in our London Cathedral that he was ready to illustrate one of the most important solemnities that prove the value of the superb edifice, with music appropriate to the occasion. It calls into play the largest resources of voices and organ; its aim is to give the grandest expression to the text that is compatible with its limited length; and the technical means employed in it are characteristic of the latest style. The purpose must be applauded, of appropriating to this class of composition one of the principles of musical construction, which is entirely absent in the works of the elder church writers, and has been too little regarded in the productions of times since the art of form has been developed in secular music—we mean the recurrence, at some later period of the plan, of an idea that has been previously presented, a device which is always impressive and may often be used to enforce the expression by reflecting the sense of one passage in the text upon another. Thus, in the Magnificat, the "Glory" is set to the same music as the opening words, admirably indicating that to give honour to the Father is truly to magnify the Lord; and again, we are reminded, at "He remembering His mercy," with beautiful pertinence, that "His mercy is on all them that fear Him," by the repetition, in a modified shape, of the same phrase. We fail to perceive what may be implied by the extreme modulation, from E into F, that introduces the earlier of these, since there is no extraordinary change of feeling from the declaration that "His Name is holy," to the acknowledgment of "His loving forgiveness." It is, we think, an oversight in the design of the setting of the prior canticle, that it has two conclusions in the key of E, the dominant of the original, namely, at "Holy is His Name," page 3, and at "Abraham and his seed, for ever," page 7, the consequence of which is an undesirable effect of length, and an irresistible notion that the intervening music might be advantageously omitted. The author appears to be insensitive to the effect of consecutive 7ths, which is worse upon some ears than any progression of 8ths or even 5ths, for they occur repeatedly in the course of the work—for instance, at page 1, score 3, bar 1, where the treble has E D over the F♯ E of the tenor; at page 8, score 1, bar 1; and at page 7, score 1, bar 3. Another questionable piece of part-writing is the progression of 7ths to 8ths—B repeated while C♯ goes to B below it, as at page 1, score 3, bar 5, and elsewhere. Yet one more progression calls for remark, because of its rarity, if not of its loveliness; this is the proceeding from 9th to 2nd, $\begin{smallmatrix} C\sharp & B \\ B & A \end{smallmatrix}$ as at page 6, score 1, bar 5, and score 2, bar 6. It is to be wished that there is no sanction for these peculiarities in the composer's treatise on harmony; because, whatever latitude he may allow himself in such matters, it would be infinitely dangerous to give any warrant for freedoms of the kind to young students.

Magnificat for a High Festival, to a modern form of the fifth tone, with vocal harmonies and organ accompaniment. By the Rev. Christopher Thompson.

THIS arrangement was made for the meeting of the Peterborough Choral Association in 1873. With very ample opportunity to explain to the performers its complications of time, of vocal distribution, of what is to be played and what omitted on the organ, and other details, it may have a good effect with a very numerous assembly of singers; but a more straightforward treatment of the subject would be very far likelier to go well, with executants gathered together from various localities for a single occasion.

Regina Cæli. Composed for the Religious of the Sacred Heart at Roehampton by Wilhelm Schulthes.

THIS is written for what are conventionally called "four equal voices," which means, four voices as unequal as variety of compass can make them. It is, in truth, to be sung by ladies only, with high, medium, low, and very low voices, to the accompaniment of the organ and harp, the latter being discretionary, but greatly enriching and diversifying the general effect. Some parts of it are for chorus and some for solo voices. The composition is particularly melodious, and the harmony is of that kind which will be acceptable to everybody, and will be truly charming to listeners of good taste but moderate schooling. We do not like the progression from the diminished to the perfect 5th, and from the 7th to the 8th, at page 18, last chord, and page 19, first chord; but, Mr. Schulthes may answer, in the words of a recent reviewer of a review in these columns, "I do," and we have a right to assume this before it is stated, since, if he had not liked, he probably would not have written the passage in question. After all, it is not a couple of chords or a doubtful progression that annul the merit of a musical composition, and there is abundant matter in the piece under notice to draw the attention from a single incident. The motet will be highly interesting to the singers, and hence is certain of an efficient performance, for it presents no difficulties; and, this certainly fulfilled, it cannot but please an audience. It is capitally fitted to the purpose for which we suppose it to have been designed, namely, the practice of the ladies of a conventual establishment, or of the school they teach, and it is as well the most important as the best of the many pleasing compositions from the same hand with which we have lately met.

"O Lord, Who hast taught us." A short Anthem for Treble Solo and Chorus. Composed by T. Osborne Marks.

THE author of this little piece is the Organist of Armagh Cathedral, and is one of those who received the title of Doctor of Music at the last examination in Dublin University. The anthem makes no parade of scholarship; but it is a far better use of learning to write with purity, than to make a vain display of extreme harmonies, imitative points and contrapuntal complications. Perhaps the most difficult thing is to write simply and interestingly at the same time, and this is here accomplished. A pleasing variety of effect arises from the interspersing of the generally prevailing choral form with occasional solo phrases. The text is the Collect for Quinquagesima Sunday, and its supplication for the gift of charity is expressed with true feeling.

Songs composed by F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy. Edited and in greater part translated by Natalia Macfarren. 8vo. Edition.

By the publication of this volume in "Novello's Complete Octavo Edition" the whole of Mendelssohn's vocal solos are placed within the reach of the general public for the price of a couple of the common-place ballads of the day. In our notice of the Folio edition of these songs we commented upon the skilful manner in which Madame Macfarren had re-translated some of those already identified with the words of Mr. Bartholomew; and we should again mention that "But the Lord will gather," and "Thou who hast doomed man to die" (the latter originally composed for the Oratorio, "St. Paul," but replaced by "I will sing of Thy great mercy,") have never been published until Messrs. Novello's first edition of the composer's songs appeared. There can be no doubt that a very decided re-action in favour of classical vocal music (if we may use such a term for what is intrinsically good) is now setting in; and if singing-masters will only help forward the good cause by guiding, instead of yielding to, the taste of their pupils, there will be little fear of the result. The issue of these beautiful songs in an octavo form is a proof that a popular edition is now called for; and many almost unknown hitherto will now we hope shortly become as popular as the few which have already become the favourites of the concert-room.

The first system of the musical score for 'Lord Christ, when Thou hadst overcome'. It features four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a grand piano accompaniment. The key signature is three sharps (F#, C#, G#) and the time signature is common time (C). The lyrics are: 'Lord Christ, when Thou hadst o - ver - come, hadst o - - ver -', 'Lord Christ, when Thou hadst overcome, hadst o - vercome the sharpness, hadst', 'Lord Christ, when Thou hadst overcome, overcome, hadst', and 'Lord Christ, when Thou hadst o - - ver - come, hadst o - ver -'. The piano part includes a 'p' (piano) dynamic marking.

possibly be imagined. The melody, however, is exceedingly attractive, and the accompaniments unexceptionable throughout. There is much eloquence in the broken phrases marked "Recit.," and the repetition of the words at the conclusion of the verses adds materially to the intensity of their expression. We see, by the list, that there are already six songs published in this series.

Les Défauts de Jacotte; Opéra de Robillard; pour Piano.

Le Pont des Soupirs; Opera de Offenbach; pour Piano.

Par J. Rummel.

THESE two Operas have furnished Mr. Rummel with some very pleasing subjects, which he has certainly treated with much skill. The passages are extremely refined, and lie well under the hand. In the first piece the "Andante," in G, has an elegant little variation, which may be recommended as good practice for young players, and the Waltz makes an effective Finale. The airs in the second piece are more familiar, and will no doubt be welcomed in their present attractive form by the numerous lovers of Offenbach's music. The Barcarolle and Serenade are included in the selection; and the unobtrusive ornaments introduced by the arranger unquestionably set them off to greater advantage. Both pieces thoroughly fulfil their intended purpose, and may be commended as amongst the best of Mr. Rummel's unpretending little Fantasias.

R. COCKS AND CO.

"Sound the Trumpet in Zion." Full Choir. Words by S. C. Hall, Esq., F.S.A. The music composed by Brinley Richards.

THE broad, clear, rhythmical tunefulness of this piece will secure it a welcome in many a place, and ensure it a spirited performance by singers who would make little effect, or none, in music that was less marked in accent and less defined in character. The harmony is as capital as the constantly paramount melody with which it is always in keeping, having a sufficient spice of modern effects to give it brightness and vigour, but being totally free from extravagance of any kind. To one point we object, the consecutive 7ths, $\begin{smallmatrix} F & E \\ G & F \end{smallmatrix}$ between the treble and alto at page 16, last bar of score 1, and first bar of score 2. It is marvellous—but the world is full of marvels—that musicians who have a devout abhorrence of two 5ths in succession, and therein evince a just reverence for the rules of our forefathers, can still write the infinitely uglier progression of two 7ths between the same parts, with a seeming imperception of its harshness, against which the old law-givers made no rule, as if they deemed it too bad for anyone to need telling that it might not be written. We could wish that the composition were somewhat shorter, but it is obvious that the composer has been hampered by the great length of his poem. Mr. Brinley Richards is well known for his successes in other branches of music, and if he write sacred pieces like the present, he will deserve to become equally popular in a new department.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS.

We roam and rule the sea.—The Homeward Watch.—The Outward Bound.

Words by W. C. Bennett. Music by J. B. Waldeck.

THESE three vocal pieces—forming a set of "Sea Songs"—although unequal in merit, are extremely vocal, and have been set with a due appreciation of Mr. Bennett's very excellent verses. No. 1 is the feeblest of the series; the melody is trifling and the accompaniment does not enhance its attraction. No. 2 is a good song, simply and effectively harmonised. We like the modulation into G minor at the conclusion of the first page; and the change into the tonic minor, on the words "And, she, in the darken'd chamber" is exceedingly appropriate. The last of the set is decidedly the best. "The Outward Bound" has a true sea flavour, and it indeed appears strange that he who wrote No. 3 could write No. 1. The subject, in A minor, is full of character, and the phrase in the tonic major steals in with much freshness. Good singers with baritone voices, who can fully enter into the spirit of this composition, may make it extremely effective. Songs of the sea are now so rare that we are pleased to call attention to this series. The maudlin ballads on the domestic affections which have so long flooded the market have now we think reached the climax of absurdity; and because we regard the songs before us as a healthy protest against such works, we are induced to give them more attention perhaps than their intrinsic value might warrant.

CHAPPELL AND CO.

The voice I loved. Song. Words by Louisa Gray.

When shadows flee away. Song. Words by Gordon Campbell.

Composed by Cotsford Dick.

THESE two songs evince much talent both for melody and harmony, the first, especially, being well suited for vocalists who are content with a simple setting of simple words, and can take the upper A flat without an effort. The accompaniments are well written throughout; but the composer, whom we presume to be an amateur, will, we are certain, thank us for telling him that the F sharp in the second bar of the symphony (against the A natural), should be G flat. The second song is somewhat laboured. We do not object to the harsh pedal chord which commences the symphony, but do not like the chromatic progression, in contrary motion, in the third bar, the ascent from the last chord of the bar to the first of the next having to us a particularly displeasing effect: nor can we reconcile ourselves to the transition from F sharp minor to A minor, in the 9th bar of page 2, even admitting that the words "Now comes a deep, dark sleep, love," demand an unexpected change of key. The unusual chord at the opening of the symphony convinces us that Mr. Dick is fearless of criticism; and where perfect reliance can be placed upon your own genius, this is a commendable quality, as the history of music has sufficiently shown us; but we counsel all young composers to remember that the greatest of their predecessors in the art have always commenced their career by adhering to established models.

WEEKES AND CO.

Gethsemane. Written by L. H. F. Du Terraux. Composed by Frederic Rivenall.

THIS song shows that its composer has much feeling for sacred music; and if in parts somewhat laboured, every phrase proves that the words have been well studied. The symphony, which is perhaps somewhat too long, prefaces with effect the voice part, a smooth melody, accompanied at first with detached chords. The Accelerando phrases leading to the burst in G major, marked Appassionato, contain some good writing; but we imagine that in the second bar of the accompaniment on page 4, a ♯ is omitted before the bass. The concluding chorus in unison is a good point; but the final phrase is somewhat tame, and will sound even more so when sung by a number of voices. The copy we have noticed is in B flat, but the song is also published in D flat.

Voices, happy voices. Solo é Dia'logo. Composed expressly for Sunday School Festivals. Music by Laban Solomon.

THE title-page of this composition tells us that it is No. 1 of "Sunday-School Lyrics." We presume that we must not be too critical upon music written for Sunday-Schools; but it appears to us that a solo with four semiquavers upon the syllable "youth" is hardly suited for voices in the course of training. One part is marked to be sung by "boys" and another by "girls;" but the chorus is written for Soprano, Alto, Tenor and Bass, as if intended for adults.

R. LIMPUS.

"Praise, my soul, the King of Heaven." Hymn for Four Voices, composed by Humphrey J. Stark, F.C.O.

HERE we have the Prize Tune, according to the award of the College of Organists, in 1873. The melody is clear, and the harmony is pure and appropriate.

SHEPHERD.

"Thou, O God, art praised in Sion." Verse Anthem, composed by Walter J. Markley.

THIS opens with a movement for chorus, which is clear and concise. It is followed by an Andante for two trebles and alto, beginning, "Thou visitest the earth," wherein the solo voices are combined with pleasing effect, and the music flows smoothly and gracefully. Then the full body of voices is called again into service for a resumption of the opening strain in a quicker tempo than at first, now set to the words, "Thou shalt show us wonderful things," and extended so as to bring the whole to a spirited conclusion.

CROGER AND CO., MILE-END ROAD.

Te Deum. By Richard Croger.

THIS piece is by no means without merit, and by no means without fault—but either balance the other. It is easy enough to sing all the parts, and the organ accompaniment is not difficult; moreover, it is dedicated to the different capacity of various choirs, for it contains the direction that it may be sung a note higher or a note lower, at discretion. We must regret that the author had not as much musicianship as musical feeling to bring to bear upon its production.

W. H. PALMER, WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

The Musical Scales simplified, by W. H. Palmer.

WE have placed the name of Mr. Palmer at the head of our notice, because, as no publisher is mentioned, we presume that intending purchasers of his invention must apply to the author. Our opinion upon the value of these mechanical contrivances for the purposes of simplifying the acquisition of the rudiments of music has been so often expressed that we need scarcely repeat it. Those who believe in their importance will see much to admire in Mr. Palmer's pictorial representation of the scales, which is intended to be fitted over the key-board of the pianoforte, placing the point on the left hand over any key (black or white) which is to be the commencing note of the scale, when the other points of the card will show the necessary sharps and flats, and also the position of the tones and semitones. Mr. Palmer adheres to the minor scale with the minor sixth and major seventh, both ascending and descending, which he truly says is "most consistent with harmonic principles;" but we think it would be good for him also to show that the sixth is frequently raised in ascending, as young students may be puzzled when they see it so written. Although, as we have always maintained, we consider that pupils should be taught all scales from music-paper, we are inclined to think that Mr. Palmer's little card will be of much service, even after they have been so acquired; for, in addition to knowing what sharps and flats are required, it is good that the unequal steps of the scale should be made visible as well as audible.

WE have received a letter from Dr. Sloman—composer of the Cantata "Supplication and Praise," noticed in our last number—complaining of our reviewer's assertion that the Trio for female voices, "Be merciful unto me," is unaccompanied. Musically speaking, this expression means that the composition is without instrumental accompaniment—and so we imagine our readers must have understood it—but we willingly give publicity to the fact that it has occasional responsive choral phrases, and also admit that, in this respect, it differs from Mendelssohn's "Lift thine eyes."

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

SCALES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I have read Mr. Kippen's letter upon the derivation of the minor scale, but it cannot be of much consequence whether the minor scale was derived from the major, or the major from the minor; we have them both, what are they?

A scale is simply the statement in alphabetical order of the sounds which form the governing chords of its mode. Thus the chords F, A, C—C, E, G—G, B, D give us the scale of C major; the chords of F, A flat, C—C, E flat, G—G, B, D give the scale of C minor. The scale of A minor is one of the secondary scales of C, coming from its chords of D minor, A minor, and E major, and bears the same relation to the major of C that the scale of A flat bears to its minor. The minor scales quoted by Mr. Kippen and common to our instruction books are chromatic forms of the minor scale, set out for a particular purpose, and their derivation just the same.

I am inclined to think that too much is, and has been, made of the scale. In our juvenile days we were taught to worship it with a blind devotion, and we have suffered for our teacher's sins. Scales are little more than useful exercises for finger or voice, intended to give facility.

Every instrument has its scale, and very odd some of them are: in the same way, most untaught singers (Nature's Minstrels!) have scales of their own, and if they have been in the way of the bagpipes, &c., the placing of a tone or semitone a little awry is a very small matter.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

G. H. P.—Mr. R. Limpus, 41, Queen Square, W.C. The second part of your letter refers to a matter upon which we cannot give an opinion.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

BIRMINGHAM.—The prospects of having good music during the coming season in this town appear more than usually hopeful. Mr. D. F. Davis announces a series of Monday evening concerts at the Town Hall; Messrs. Harrison's prospectus states that four concerts will be given, Madame Adelina Patti being engaged for the first; and the Festival Choral Society's fifteenth series of subscription concerts, commencing on the 8th inst., will include the following works:—Mendelssohn's As the Hart pants, O come let us sing, When Israel out of Egypt came, and the first part of St. Paul, Handel's Acis and Galatea, Macfarren's May Day, and Haydn's Creation, and First Mass.

BOXFORD, SUFFOLK.—The new organ constructed for the Church by Messrs. Hill and Co., was formally opened on the 26th August, by Mr. Martin S. Skeffington, Hon. Organist of S. Barnabas, Kensington, from whose specification and under whose superintendence it was built. The congregation was very large, both on the day of opening and on the succeeding Sunday, and the very fine tone of the Organ was universally admired. The Vox Humana stop was made specially by Messrs. Cavallé, of Paris. The music was Anglican, and the singing of the members of the choir reflected the highest credit on their instructors. Mr. Skeffington played a selection of pieces after each service. The funds for the instrument—almost £400—have been nearly all raised since last September, by the untiring energy and devotion of the Misses Byng, the Rector's daughters.

BUXTON.—Another of Mr. Adams's special concerts was given most successfully on Thursday evening, the 27th August, before a large audience. The vocalists were Miss Emma Beasley, a very promising artist, who holds the Westmorland scholarship of the Royal Academy, and Mr. Henry Pyatt. The celebrated harpist, Mr. Aptommas, was a great attraction; and the orchestra was considerably augmented. The clear and fresh voice of Miss Emma Beasley was heard to advantage in the recitative and air "From Mighty Kings," and Mr. Pyatt was highly effective in all his songs. A duet for pianoforte and violin, by Mr. Julian Adams and Mr. Otto Bernhardt, was a feature in the programme; and the Overtures to Zampa and Preciosa, were well played by the Pavilion band.

CAPE TOWN.—At a concert recently given at the Mutual Hall, a Cantata called Belshazzar's Feast, the music by Mr. G. F. Root, was performed with much success. The choir, trained in the Tonic Sol-fa method, gave the choruses with good effect. The solos were for the most part excellently delivered; one especially, sung by a young lady, representing an angel messenger from the Lord, creating a marked impression, from the fact of the vocalist being unseen by the audience. Mr. Ashley deserves every credit for the admirable manner in which he has drilled the choir.

CHESHAM.—The offertories at the churches of St. Mary's, Chesham, Christ Church, Ashley Green, St. George's, Tyler's Hill, at Flauden and at Latimer, on Hospital Sunday, were in behalf of the Chesham Cottage Hospital. The services were special thanksgiving services for the late bountiful harvest, the sacred edifice being tastefully adorned for the occasion. The morning and evening services commenced with the Old Hundredth, sung in unison with accompaniment by Calkin. The Venite was sung to Hinde, the Te Deum to Boynton Smith, in E flat, the Jubilate to Purcell. The Kyrie was by the Rev. E. Young, Clifton. At the conclusion of the morning service Handel's "To Thee Cherubin" was played on the organ. In the evening the service was semi-choral. The special psalms were chanted, the 145th to Ouseley, in E flat, the 147th to King. The anthem was "O Lord, how manifold are Thy works," (Barnby). At the close of the service, Mr. Groom, the organist, played "The marvellous work," from Haydn's Creation, "The Glory of the Lord" from the Messiah, and "The Coronation Anthem," with his accustomed ability and precision. The careful training of the choir by the new organist was evidenced by the heartiness and unanimity with which the musical portion of the service was given.

CHRISTCHURCH, NEW ZEALAND.—We are glad to learn, from the report of proceedings at the Annual General Meeting of the Christchurch Harmonic Society, that music is making satisfactory progress in that part of the colony. During the year, ending in June, Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise and St. Paul, Spohr's God, Thou art Great, Romberg's Lay of the Bell, with a miscellaneous selection, and Handel's Messiah had been given; and it was proposed to put the following works in rehearsal as soon as possible:—Handel's Samson, Mendelssohn's Walpurgis Night and Elijah, Spohr's Last Judgment, and, if practicable, a new work to be obtained from England; the Messiah to be given at an extra concert at Christmas.

CORK.—Mr. George Perren's Opera Company has just concluded a most successful engagement at the Munster Hall, which has been elegantly fitted up by the present proprietors for operatic and dramatic performances. The following are the principal artists:—Madame F. Lancia, Madame Gillies Corri, Madame Heywood, Miss Whittall, Mrs. Payne, Mr. G. Perren, Mr. B. M. Cotte, Mr. H. Corri, Mr. F. Cook and Mr. Stevens. The band and chorus have been carefully selected, and Mr. R. M. Levey, of Dublin, conducted. Martiana, The Bohemian Girl and Faust, were amongst the most successful operas, but the great novelty was Benedict's Lily of Killarney, which was produced on Friday evening, the 18th ult., for the first time in Cork, when the theatre was so crowded that hundreds were unable to obtain admission. Encores and calls were numerous and the applause enthusiastic.

DEAL.—On Monday, the 14th ult., Mr. W. Bollen Harrison gave his annual concert at the Assembly Rooms, Park Street, before a large audience. Haydn's Symphony in G minor, arranged as a pianoforte duet, was well played by Mr. Harrison and a lady, and solos were afterwards performed with much effect by the concert-giver, and enthusiastically applauded. The principal vocalists were Madame Gilbert, Mr. Percy Rivers and Mr. Stanley Smith. A welcome item in the programme was the harp playing of Mr. Aptommas, who, in addition to a solo, played a duet with Mr. Harrison, which was cordially received.

DUNDEE.—The Report of the Dundee Amateur Choral Union announces that the Committee intends at the forthcoming concerts to engage the Orchestra of the Glasgow Choral Union; and amongst the works to be performed—Sterndale Bennett's Woman of Samaria, Brahms's Song of Destiny, and Randegger's Fridolin are mentioned. Every well-wisher to the progress of music in Scotland should give patronage and support to an Association which, from its small beginning in 1860, has kept steadily in view the highest principles of the art to which it is devoted.

EAST GREENWICH, R. I.—The inaugural session of the Normal Musical Institution, came to a close on Wednesday, Aug. 19th, with the most brilliant musical entertainment ever held in the neighbourhood. Mr. George L. Osgood, was the vocalist, Mr. B. J. Lang, pianist, and Mr. G. E. Whiting, organist. The Beethoven Quintette Club, and the chorus, composed of the members of the Institute, under the direction of their leader, Mr. Carl Zerrahn, also gave efficient aid. The programme consisted for the most part of classical music, which was well performed, and highly appreciated by a large and fashionable audience. Dr. Tourjee may well be congratulated on the great success which has attended this undertaking.

HALIFAX.—At the Baptist Chapel at Queensbury, near Halifax, a new organ, built by Messrs. Wordsworth and Maskell, of Leeds, was opened on the 5th ult., by Mr. J. V. Roberts, Mus. Bac., Oxon., organist and choirmaster of the Parish Church, Halifax. The programme included J. S. Bach's G minor and C major Fugues, Mendelssohn's Second Organ Sonata, &c. There was also a chorus of fifty voices, the principal vocalists being Miss Wheeler, Miss Wild, and Messrs. Leach and Knowles, of Bradford. The programme was excellently rendered, and the organ reflects the greatest credit on the builders.

HANLEY.—The new organ at St. Luke's Church, Wellington, erected by Mr. Stringer, Hanley, was opened on Sunday, the 13th ult., by Mr. Arthur Crook, of Newcastle-under-Lyme. The services were fully choral, the choir appearing for the first time in surplices. The organ contains, great organ 11 stops, swell 8, pedal 1, couplers 3.

LEEDS.—Mr. J. W. Sykes, of the Royal Academy of Music, entertained a numerous audience with a violin Recital, on the 14th ult., in the Church Institute. The programme comprised a variety of pieces well adapted to exhibit the power of Mr. Sykes upon his instrument. The selection included a fugue from Bach's Sonata, in D minor, and Beethoven's Romance in G major. The Recital was agreeably varied with several songs by Miss H. Tomlinson, a young vocalist of much promise. Mr. R. S. Burton accompanied.

MELBOURNE.—The Philharmonic Society gave an eminently successful performance of Israel in Egypt, at the Town Hall, on the 16th June. The band and chorus numbered about 300. The principal vocalists were Madame Palmieri, Miss Pitts, Miss Bassett, and Messrs. Armes Beaumont, S. Lamble, and S. Angus. There was a fine orchestra, and the grand organ was used. Several of the numbers were so well rendered as to call forth encores, among which were the "Hailstone" chorus, "The Enemy said" and "Thou shalt bring them in." Mr. I. Summers conducted. The Mount of Olives is announced as the next Oratorio for performance by the Society.—At S. Peter's Church, on the Festival of S. Peter's Day, Mendelssohn's Lobgesang was performed as the anthem, with full band accompaniments. The Symphony was played as an introductory voluntary, and the rest of the work after the Third collect. The Rev. Canon Handfield chanted the service, and the Rev. Dr. Bromley preached the sermon. The organist, Mr. I. Summers, conducted, and Mr. Gould, the organist of the Philharmonic Society, presided at the organ.

MANCHESTER.—A Hand-bell Ringing contest, open to general competition, took place at the Zoological Gardens, Belle Vue, on the 21st ult. Although the weather was unfavourable, the attendance was very large. Several money prizes were awarded, the Judges being C. Warwick Jordan, Esq., Mus. Bac., Oxon., Messrs. Saville Swallow, and E. Williams.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—The Prospectus of Mr. W. Rea's ninth series of Concerts has been issued. Several important works are promised, including Handel's Messiah and Judas Maccabæus, Mendelssohn's Elijah, Athalie and Loreley, Schumann's Paradise and the Peri, and Randegger's Fridolin. Orchestral works by Schumann, Brahms, Lachner, &c., will also be given. The list of artists engaged comprise Mesdames Sinico, Edith Wynne, Banks, Edna Hall, Patey and Julia Elton, and Messrs. Vernon Rigby, Cummings, Pearson, Patey, Federici, Lewis Thomas, &c. The band includes many of the best instrumentalists, led by Mr. Carodus, and the chorus consists of 150 voices.

NORTH END.—The new organ for St. Mark's Church, was formally opened on Sunday, the 30th August, in presence of a large congregation. The instrument, which has been manufactured by Messrs. Hunter, of London, cost £400. It is placed in the south chamber in the chancel, and will materially assist the choir. The services on Sunday were strictly choral throughout, that in the morning being especially interesting, and commencing with an extemporaneous introduction and Schubert's "Shepherd's Song of Hope." The anthem "I will give thanks," was composed expressly for the occasion by Mr. Philip Klitz, the organist and choirmaster. An appropriate sermon was preached by the Rev. J. S. Blake, of St. Jude's, Southsea. Mr. Philip Klitz presided at the organ.

PAIGNTON, SOUTH DEVON.—A highly successful morning concert was given on Friday, the 11th ult., in aid of the fund for the restoration of the East Window of the Parish Church. Mr. A. H. Dendy kindly lent the Royal Bijou Theatre for the occasion. The principal performers were Mrs. Frederick Farwell and the Rev. Albert and Mrs. Van Straubensee. The duet "Una Candida Columba" (Gabussi) was excellently rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Van Straubensee, and rapturously encored. Mrs. Farwell accompanied throughout with great taste and feeling. The concert was repeated in the evening with a slight change of programme. The pecuniary results were £33, handed over to the Vicar, the Rev. F. W. Poland.

PAISLEY.—On Thursday night, the 10th ult., St. George's Church was filled to overflowing by an influential audience, assembled to hear the service of sacred music in connection with the inauguration of the new organ, presented to the congregation by Jas. Clark, Esq., Camphill. The organ—constructed by Messrs. Connacher and Co., its exterior being from the designs of Mr. Rennison, is in exquisite harmony with the simple and effective improvements that have been made in the church. The musical proceedings were of the most satisfactory character, and passed off to the complete gratification of the audience. After the singing of the "Old Hundredth," in which the audience joined, the choir rendered in excellent style, R. A. Smith's anthem, "Sing unto God," the solo voices appearing to considerable advantage. Lefebure-Wely's showy Offertoire, No. 4, displayed the capabilities of the organ and the powers of Miss Hoek. The instrument is well balanced throughout, and the quality of tone rich and mellow. The foundation stops are particularly good, and the reeds of very superior quality. Mr. Hoek conducted. The collection made at the door in aid of the building fund amounted to about £60.

QUEENSTOWN.—Two interesting concerts have been recently given by the Choir of Rushbrook Church, assisted by several distinguished amateurs, ladies and gentlemen, in aid of the fund towards the stained glass window just erected in the chancel. A choice selection of music was most carefully rendered, Dr. Marks, organist of the cathedral, conducting. The attendance on both occasions was large and fashionable.

RAMSGATE.—Sunday, the 13th ult., was observed at St. Mary's Church as a day of special thanksgiving for the harvest. The decorations were, as usual, beautifully and tastefully arranged, and the services in every way appropriate to the occasion. A large congregation assembled at eleven o'clock, when the service began by the choir singing hymn 223—"Come, ye thankful people, come," as a processional. The Venite was sung to Tallis's well-known chant, and the proper psalms (the 65th and 103rd) were chanted to Battishill in G and D. The Te Deum was sung to Smart's service in F, and the Jubilate, to Thorne in C. The anthem was "I will magnify Thee" (Sir J. Goss), and hymn 224—"Praise, O praise our God and King"—was sung as an introit. The Rev. R. Patterson preached an appropriate sermon. At the evening service, hymn 223 was again sung as the processional, and the proper psalm (104) was chanted to two chants, respectively composed by Walond and Russell. The Cantate Domino and Deus Misereatur were sung to music composed by Mr. Thorne. The anthem was "Fear not, O land" (Sir J. Goss). The Rev. A. Whitehead, Vicar of St. Peter's, preached a very eloquent and impressive sermon. At the conclusion of the service Mr. Thorne played Mendelssohn's War March of Priests, from Athalie, Elvey's Festival March, and "The Silver Trumpets." Great praise is due to Mr. Thorne and the members of the choir. The offertories, amounting to £25 19s. 1d., were devoted to the funds of the Ramsgate and St. Lawrence Dispensary.

STAFFORD.—On Monday, the 14th ult., the first popular concert of the season was given by Mr. W. A. Marson, organist of Christ Church, at Rowley Street School-room, on behalf of the organ improvement fund of the church. The principal performers were Miss Gillard, Miss Lucy Marson, Mr. Wilkinson, Mr. Goddard, Mr. Rice, Mr. Holmes, Mr. Baynah, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Bates, Mr. Clewlow, the Misses Lea and the Misses Bennett. Mr. I. H. Bourne (organist of Pentridge), presided at the pianoforte. The songs of Miss Gillard, the Misses Bennett and Mr. Wilkinson were warmly appreciated, as also the instrumental duet of Mr. Goddard and Miss Lucy Marson, and the pianoforte trios of the Misses Lea. The amount realized was £6 10s.

STALYBRIDGE.—The new organ erected by Messrs. Hill and Son, of London, for St. Paul's Church, was opened by Mr. W. T. Best, on the 8th ult., when an excellent selection of sacred music was given. The church was very full; and the capabilities of the instrument were most successfully tested by the organist.

STAMFORD.—A very successful amateur concert was given in St. John's School-room, on Wednesday evening, the 9th ult., to a crowded audience; the proceeds, about £9, being devoted to charitable purposes. The programme was a very attractive one, and the songs, duets, and trios, were well rendered by Miss Wissel, Miss Parker, Mrs. Houghton, Mrs. Fisher, Mrs. Musson, Mr. Rippin, Mr. Proctor, Mr. Musson and Mr. Errington. "Sweet and low" was sung as a quartet, and "Hush thee, my babe" as a chorus: both without accompaniment. The part-singing was well rendered throughout, especially Rossini's "La Carita," solos by Miss Wissel, Mrs. Fisher, Mrs. Musson, and Miss Phillips. The Harp solos by Mrs. Abby, were loudly re-demanded. Mr. H. Nicholson conducted with his usual ability.

TORONTO.—The Philharmonic Society announces four concerts during the season, 1874-5, at which the following works will be performed: Haydn's Creation, Handel's Messiah, Randegeer's Fridolin, and Mendelssohn's St. Paul, the last two compositions being given for the first time in Canada.

TREFFRU.—On Friday evening, the 11th ult., a concert was given at the School-room, for the benefit of Robert and Henry Parry. The room was crowded with a respectable audience. "Hai ho, Gweno fwyw gu," sung by Miss Roberts (Llanrwst), was heartily applauded. "The heart bowed down," was sung by Mr. Barker, in response to an encore for which he gave "Down among the dead men." Mr. Mollineux (Llanrwst), created a decided effect, and was encored in a composition of his own, "May God protect the poor," but his great success, and undoubtedly the gem of the evening, was, "The Old Bridge."

TENBURY.—On Thursday, August 27th, the Musical Society gave a very successful performance of Sir F. Ouseley's Oratorio, Hagar. The band and chorus were under the direction of the Rev. J. Hampton. The tenor solos were sung in a highly commendable manner by Mr. Charles Becket, and the arduous part for the soprano was rendered by Miss Katharine Poyntz, who elicited frequent and hearty applause from a very large audience. To Miss Antelli and the Rev. W. D. V. Duncombe were assigned the contralto and bass songs, the former being encored in the striking air, "Cast out this bondwoman and her son." The composer was present and assisted at a harmonium in supplying some of the missing wind parts.

TROWBRIDGE.—On Thursday evening, the 10th ult., a Ballad Concert was given by Mr. H. Millington in Hill's Hall. An excellent programme was well performed by Madame Thaddeus Wells, Miss Joyce Maas, Mr. Orlando Christian, and Mr. Henry Nicholson (the celebrated flautist). Mr. Orlando Christian sang "Farewell" with great effect, and Madame Thaddeus Wells was highly effective in "Lo, here the gentle lark," with flute obbligato by Mr. Nicholson, which drew forth rapturous applause and a hearty encore.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.—On Monday evening, the 3rd Aug., a concert of vocal and instrumental music, was given at the Philharmonic Hall, in aid of the Protestant Orphanage. The concert commenced with Romberg's Lay of the Bell, which was performed in an excellent manner. The Chief Justice Egbie, sustained the part of the master in a creditable manner. The remaining solos were sung by Mrs. Rhodes, Miss Redfern, Miss Devereux, Mr. Redfern and Mr. Berkeley. The choruses were given with effect and precision, especially the "Fire Chorus," which elicited special applause. In the second part, Mrs. Kent, Mrs. Caldwell, and Miss Cooper, contributed several songs, which were well received. Mrs. Leizer and Miss Ada Wilson, were highly effective in a duet for two pianos. The accompaniments on the pianoforte and harmonium, were entrusted to Miss Dodgson and Miss Ada Wilson (organist of St. John's). Mr. C. Schaffer led the band, and Mr. T. Wilson conducted. The balance handed over to the Orphanage, was £95 18s.

YORK.—The Twenty-first Annual Meeting of the Amateur Musical Society was held on Monday evening, the 14th ult., in the School-room, St. Andrewgate, when there was a numerous attendance of members. Mr. Chas. Duffill, in the absence of the President, occupied the chair. Mr. John Thorpe, Hon. Sec., read the report, which showed that the past season had been, both in a financial and musical point of view, the most successful. Several new members were added, the whole of the retiring officers were unanimously re-elected, and after a cordial vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting terminated.

MARTIAL MUSIC: "Deutschland and freedom evermore." For voices only. The music composed for the Leeds Musical Festival by WILLIAM SPARK. Octavo, price 1s. Twelve copies and upwards at half price from the Author, Springfield Villa, Leeds. London: Novello, Ewer and Co.

From the Musical Standard.

"Dr. Spark has just written for the approaching Leeds Musical Festival a striking part-song, entitled 'Martial Music' (Novello, Ewer and Co.). The setting, somewhat long and elaborate in form, displays many ingenious and clever features. A weird phrase in unison, in the key of F minor, commences the piece to the words 'A fresh north-east sweeps o'er the Rhine,' and throughout the song the harmony is broken again and again to introduce this. Another effective point is a bold passage of thirds between the treble and alto, and the tenor and bass in contrary motion; the rugged strength of this is very remarkable. A placid andantino episode in the major contrasts well with the portions which precede and follow it. The clever use of that grand Lutheran chorale 'Ein feste Burg' is also noticeable; massively harmonized it forms a fine conclusion to one of the best part-songs for a large choir we have seen for a long time."

NEW MUSIC POST-FREE AT HALF PRICE.

"BEAUTIFUL VENICE." Arranged as an easy Pianoforte piece, and fingered for teaching. By W. SMALLWOOD. Exquisitely illustrated. Price 3s.

TO YOUNG COMPOSERS ABOUT TO PUBLISH.

DR. LLOYD FOWLE (now resident in London) undertakes the revision of Authors' Manuscripts, and the entire publication of the same. His long experience of twenty years, and the very successful works he has produced, may reasonably tend to inspire confidence as to the care and good workmanship that will be brought to bear in the revision or publication of any works that may be entrusted to him. Estimates given for plates, printing, and paper for 100 copies or more.

N.B.—ORGANS, HARMONIUMS, or PIANOFORTES selected from the best London Houses, at the shortest notice. In these days of fraud and imposition, the advice of a Professional Musician is an absolute necessity. Dr. Fowle's selection of instruments for the clergy and others, and his revision of literary as well as musical works (having been Editor of a first-class London magazine), has given the highest satisfaction in England and the Colonies. Address (at present) to country address, 1, Eastgate, Winchester.

DR. FOWLE'S Anthem Works and Voluntaries have had a very large sale as follows:—

ANTHEMS SPECIAL and GENERAL, containing New Music by eminent Composers for all the Great Festivals, Saints' Days, and Holy Seasons of the Church, being a most valuable production, and the first complete work of the kind that has ever been produced. No choir should be without a copy. Postage, 10d. Apply only to Dr. Lloyd Fowle, 1, Eastgate, Winchester.

"We have not seen a better work for the general use of choirmasters than this volume so admirably compiled by Dr. Fowle, and as the price of the work (nearly 400 pages) is only seven shillings and sixpence, we can confidently predict for it a wide field of acceptance, and the honour of being ranked amongst the standard works dedicated to the usage of the Church."—Sunday Times of August 30.

"It is unquestionable that Dr. Fowle has supplied our Parish Churches with Anthem music generally good in itself, and always adapted to their needs."—Daily Telegraph. (There are several attractive Anthems for Christmas in the Volume.)

"You have done more for Church Music for Country Choirs than any man living."—Rev. J. W. Flavell, Ridlington Rectory, Norwich.

"I consider your musical abilities to be of a very high order."—Earl of Wilton. Dr. Lloyd Fowle, 1, Eastgate, Winchester.

DR. FOWLE'S CHRISTMAS CANTATA is the most popular work ever produced for small church classes or private use, and contains 31 pages of Anthems, Carols, Glee, and other music. Fifth Edition. 7d. post free. Reduced from 2s. 6d. His popular Christmas Anthem, "Arise, shine," is in a Twelfth Edition. Folio copy, 7d., class copy, 2d. Four Christmas Anthems, three Carols, and Glee as specimens (with popular Musical Ghost Story for Penny Readings or Concerts), for 1s. 8d. post free. Address, Dr. Lloyd Fowle, 1, Eastgate, Winchester.

A NEW WORK FOR AMATEUR ORGANISTS.

FAVOURITE SONGS from the ORATORIOS, arranged for the ORGAN (with Pedal Obbligato), chiefly for the use of Amateurs, by GEORGE R. GRIFFITHS.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS EACH; POST-FREE, 1s. 6d.

- | | |
|--|---|
| 1. HE SHALL FEED HIS FLOCK. Handel. | 8. WISE MEN FLATTERING. |
| 2. HE WAS DESPISED. Do. | 9. WHAT THOUGH I TRACE; and PIOUS ORGIES. |
| 3. ANGELS, EVER BRIGHT AND FAIR. Do. | 10. THY REBUKE HATH BROKEN HIS HEART. |
| 4. HOW BEAUTIFUL ARE THE FEET. Do. | 11. HE WAS CUT OFF OUT OF THE LAND OF THE LIVING. |
| 5. IF GOD BE FOR US. Do. | 12. I KNOW THAT MY REDEEMER LIVETH. |
| 6. TYRANNIC LOVE. Do. | |
| 7. LORD, REMEMBER DAVID; and HOLY, HOLY. | To be continued. |

In publishing the above, Chappell and Co. feel they are supplying a want long felt by Amateur Organists, as this work removes the difficulty amateurs experience in performing Handel's songs from the scores. Being published in three lines, the solo parts and accompaniments are easily and effectively distributed.

The words of each song being printed upon the top line will be found of great service to the performer in giving proper expression to the songs.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN.

By WILLIAM SPARK, Mus. D., Organist of the Town Hall, Leeds.

No. 1, CONCERT FANTASIA IN B MAJOR. PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

ADAGIO—MODERATO—ANDANTE—FINALE.

"THIS, the first of a series of original compositions from the fertile genius of this accomplished musician, is well adapted for concert performance. The Fantasia will be an acceptable addition to the repertory of organ performers."—Western Times.

"The piece is well adapted for its purpose, namely, to appear upon the programme of a concert, or recital, for it at the same time combines legitimate and good effect with facility of performance."—Musical Standard.

NEW WORK FOR SINGING CLASSES.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS.

For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass.

The present collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the Favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The Words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small classes.

W. HATTERSLEY'S
CELEBRATED ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS, MANUFACTURED ONLY BY

W. HATTERSLEY and Co., 10 and 12, Bow-street, Sheffield.
These Instruments are superior to all other Makers, English or Foreign.

Every Instrument voiced and thoroughly tested before leaving the establishment by Mr. Wm. Hattersley.

These Instruments are manufactured from the very best, well-seasoned Materials, in double veneered cases, and upon improved principles, and contain all the latest improvements invented by W. Hattersley, and although the cost of their construction is thereby considerably increased, the fact of their being manufactured for their own retail sale only (and not for the trade), enables them to sell their Harmoniums at the same price as the ordinary and much inferior Harmoniums sold by other music dealers.

Books of Designs and above 200 testimonials free by post or upon application.

Special attention is called to the DRAWING-ROOM MODELS, as being the most perfect Harmoniums ever manufactured, having a full Organ Tone.

W. Hattersley and Co., Harmonium Manufacturers, 10 and 12, Bow-street, Sheffield. Manufactory, Orange Works, Orange-street.

Estimates and Specifications furnished for Concert Rooms, Churches, School Rooms, &c.

CAUTION.—Being in London, and finding that a number of imitations of my now celebrated SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS are offered to the public as the genuine Instruments, I think it due to the Musical Profession, Amateurs, and the Trade, to make the following statement:—Nine years ago, after much thought and labour, I succeeded in completing the short Grand, adopting the cross-string principle of Steinway, to lessen the size, and making many improvements in the sound-board and action; and it is well known to the musical world of Germany that I was the originator of these Pianos. Since that time additional improvements have been effected, the sale has gradually increased, and at the present time I have more than 250 workmen engaged exclusively on their manufacture. The acknowledged superiority of these Pianofortes to any other description of the same size has caused them to be closely imitated by various makers; and, in one instance, the name "Beethoven Grand," which I originally used as a distinctive trade mark, but have since abandoned, has been adopted; and with unexampled modesty, the public is now invited to accept the copy as the original, and to consider the genuine as spurious. Among the numerous testimonials I have received (including five medals), I may be permitted to mention that his Majesty the King of Saxony, who takes great interest in Art and Manufactures, and is in addition an excellent musician, honoured my manufactory with a visit on February 25th last, and was pleased to express his entire satisfaction. The Depot for my Pianofortes in London is at Mr. FLAVELL'S, 26, North Audley Street, W., where they may be seen in great variety.—ERNST KAPS. Sole Importer.—CHARLES RUSSELL.

NOVEMBER 1, 1874.

TWO MUSICAL FESTIVALS.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

THE North of England was once famous for Musical Festivals, and history records many an artistic triumph at York, Bradford, Liverpool, and Leeds. But curiously enough, the section of the country where we expect to find resolution and perseverance in a special degree, has never yet been able to perpetuate such gatherings, and so to follow the example of Norwich in the East, Birmingham in the Midland, and the three Cathedral towns in the West. The enterprises started north of the Humber and Mersey have endured for a little time and then vanished away, or else made spasmodic appearances, on a diminutive scale. Under certain conditions the cause of this would be worth examination, but it may well go unheeded at a time when clear signs of a revival are apparent. The North is waking up again, and, unless appearances are more than usually deceitful, the time is at hand when it will divide Festival honours with the rest of the kingdom. At this every well-wisher to music rejoices for the special reason that what the North does is generally done well, and also because it has long been known as the seat of no inconsiderable musical culture. The art of music in this country needs all the help that can be given to it, and when great and powerful communities identify themselves with its cause in a manner which might almost be called official, the accession cannot be over-estimated in point of value. On account of this the Festivals just held at Liverpool and Leeds have a significance beyond what at first sight appears. Valuable in themselves, they are the outward and visible sign of a revival which is likely to spread far and last long. I am disposed to believe this the more firmly because, in each case, the Festival scheme was started under difficulties that called forth a good deal of energy and self-sacrifice. One may reasonably distrust the vitality of a movement which has never passed through the ordeal of trial, but a different case presents itself when opposition, encountered at the very outset, has had to be fought down with stern persistence. Under such circumstances distrust is not reasonable at all, and, therefore, both the Festivals referred to may put in a claim for public confidence. About the nature of the difficulties through which they passed I do not intend to say much. It is easy to assume that trouble sprang less from considerations connected with music, than from a selfish regard for personal and other interests, which either were not duly considered to the satisfaction of those concerned, or were supposed to be imperilled. In the present state of human nature, very little purpose is served by railing at such a condition of things,—one to be reckoned upon as inevitable, and I need do no more than congratulate Liverpool and Leeds upon the spirit which overcame the obstacles hinted at, and carried the enterprise to a more or less successful issue.

The musical arrangements made at Liverpool were, in some respects, open to criticism. This remark, however, does not apply to the engagement of Sir Julius Benedict as conductor; the veteran maestro having claims arising not only out of his eminence as a musician, but, also, from the fact that, during several years past, he has been conductor of the local Philharmonic Society. Equally free from liability to censure was the securing, as soloists, of Mdle. Albani, Miss Wynne, Mdme. Patey, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. E. Lloyd, Herr Behrens, Mr. Santley, Miss Dora Schirmacher (piano); Herr Straus and Mr. Carrodus (violins). The orchestra of more than a hundred instruments, led by M. Sainton, though not perfect in its "wind" department, was fairly up to the necessary mark, and it is not often that a better chorus than the 300 voices trained by Mr. James Sanders, challenges notice. So far, all was as it should be, but, from an artistic point of view, the engagement of Mdme. Adelina Patti to sing at two concerts for £800 lies open to question. I am not about to join in the outcry against Mdme. Patti for taking so large a sum from the Festival funds. The Diva's talents are as much a marketable commodity as a waggon load of turnips, and their value is just what they will fetch. It appears, moreover, from a statement recently issued by the committee, that Mdme. Patti's engagement was a good stroke of business, and brought in a considerable sum. But against the question of profit and loss must be set the fact that to engage the most popular singer of the day for hackneyed songs at evening concerts is to depreciate those more important performances which are the raison d'être of the occasion. The Liverpool people flocked in crowds to hear Mdme. Patti sing "Within a mile of Edinbro' town," and stayed away from "St. Paul," whereas, under ordinary conditions, they would probably have chosen the oratorio. That the committee, knowing their public, acted with the best intentions, and with a good deal of worldly wisdom, I admit. Let us hope that, on the next occasion, they will not consider it necessary to secure the success of a great musical festival by making its foremost attraction such as the one which brought in most money a few weeks ago. For the reason, probably, that dictated Mdme. Patti's engagement, the programme consisted, in the main, of works now past the stage of novelty. The managers appear to have distrusted the local amateurs, and thought it best to offer them a familiar bill of fare; but, with a strange inconsistency from this point of view, they left out of the programme the two oratorios—the "Messiah" and "Elijah,"—usually depended upon to draw a "house." Looking at all the circumstances of the case, I do not see how grave fault can be found with the Liverpool scheme. There were reasons, apart from the beauty of the work, why "St. Paul" should be given; Liverpool having an interest in it, arising out of the first performance there in 1836. The "Creation" (two parts) might have been spared, it is true, and also the Handelian selections, but Gounod's Mass "SS. Angeli Custodes," was new to the town, and so was Sullivan's "Light of the World." As respects the evening concerts, no fault could be found with the choice of Mozart's Symphony in G minor, Beethoven's "Pastoral," Gounod's "Jeanne d'Arc," (first time in Liverpool), and Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony; while in Professor Oakeley's March "Edinburgh," Mr. G. A. Macfarren's festal Overture, and Mr. J. F. Barnett's descriptive piece "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," an important element of absolute novelty was provided. The committee might, perhaps, have done better, but few will deny that they did well.

The Festival began in the Philharmonic Hall on Tuesday, September 29, with a performance of "St. Paul;" his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh acting as president. Artists of familiar attainments like Miss Wynne, Mdme. Patey, Mr.

Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, being entrusted with the solos, the merit of their rendering everybody will at once assume. I must not pass so lightly over the general execution of the oratorio, nor, over the labours of the chorus. Liverpool was, of course, expected to render justice to "St. Paul"—a work it had the honour of introducing to English notice, but the most sanguine could hardly have anticipated a performance so uniformly good. No slip, of consequence, took place from first to last, while the concerted numbers were given with a precision and grandeur that called for the highest praise. Thus early did the chorus make their mark; and here I cannot do better than acknowledge the success attained throughout the Festival by a body of amateurs who might well represent a community far more cultured in its musical tastes than Liverpool seems to be. As a plain matter of fact, I cannot reconcile the existence of a chorus so able and enthusiastic with the indifferent audiences who attended the Festival. It may be that, beneath the rank of those who can afford to buy high-priced tickets, there is a class, musically educated, from which the Festival singers were drawn. In that case, the sooner the mercantile aristocracy of the town emulate the artistic "proclivities" of those upon whom they profess to look down, the better for their reputation. Some remarks are due, also, to "St. Paul" itself, in view of the fact that it was preferred to "Elijah," and that there are obvious signs of a change for the better in its position. I shall not enter upon the task of comparing two works which are so nearly equal in value that each has ever had, and will continue to have, enthusiastic partisans. Enough for my present purpose, if all will agree, as needs they must, that while "Elijah" may not have been unduly exalted, "St. Paul" has been unduly debased. The difference between them, if to the disadvantage of the earlier work in any degree, is not so much so as to explain the difference in their treatment; wherefore the increased popularity of "St. Paul" involves the removal of a stigma, not so much from the work itself as from those who are its judges. But still more is indicated by the augmented favour shown to Mendelssohn's Christian oratorio. It bespeaks a stronger taste for the purest and noblest kind of sacred art, and it must result in increased attention to the history and character of the music. Already many particulars have appeared concerning the unpublished numbers belonging to the earliest form of the work—particulars which I hope to supplement in the fullest manner very shortly—and soon no reason will exist why "St. Paul" should not be, in all respects, as well known as its rival and successor "Elijah." When this consummation is attained, justice will be done to a musical epic of surpassing merit. The first evening programme included, besides Mozart's Symphony in G minor, and Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in the same key, Professor Oakeley's new March, and Mr. Macfarren's new Overture. These things, with a Cavatina for violin, by Raff, and three of the pretty Hungarian Dances, arranged by Brahms and Joachim, not to speak of songs by M^{de} Patti, M^{lle}. Albani, and Herr Behrens, made up a very attractive scheme; or, rather, one which should have been attractive, for, sooth to say, the audience received the classical works as those might who do not understand them, and reserved all enthusiasm for the prime donne. The symphony was well performed; and Miss Schirmacher, a pupil of Herr Reinecke, played the concerto like a clever child of whom much may be expected; taking part, also, with Herr Straus, in the Cavatina and Dances. Mr. Oakeley's March was conducted by the composer in person, and may at once be set down as successful. It is not original in the sense that it recalls nothing to memory, but an original March would, indeed, be a rara avis in terra. The capacities of the form are exhausted; wherefore, let Mr. Oakeley have the credit belonging to one who, from a familiar model, turns out a workmanlike thing. It has been objected that the March is too heavily scored, but in music of this character we look for pomposity and noise, of which, however, it by no means wholly consists. There is a trio in the subdominant key that does special credit to the composer's skill and fancy, while the work, as a whole, is more than creditable, and quite justified the Duke of Edinburgh in personally complimenting Mr. Oakeley upon his success. I must decline to express any opinion about Mr. Macfarren's overture till it has been heard under conditions more suitable. The performance was none of the best, the audience were inattentive, and the whole thing fell flat. Happily the work remains, and is entitled to careful attention on a subsequent occasion. Such attention it will, assuredly, receive, and then will be the time to weigh the merits which can hardly be absent from anything written by the distinguished composer of "St. John the Baptist."

I may pass briefly over the work done on the second morning. Two parts of Haydn's "Creation," solos by M^{lle}. Albani, Mr. Bentham and Herr Behrens, were followed by Gounod's Mass "SS. Angeli Custodes," and that by a selection of seven pieces from the "Messiah" and "Israel in Egypt," in which Miss Wynne, M^{de}. Patey, and Mr. Lloyd took part. M. Gounod's Mass having already been discussed in these columns there is no need to dwell upon it; while, as regards the entire concert, it will suffice to add that the Liverpool people expressed their indifference by sending only a select representation to "assist." The evening entertainment opened with the "Pastoral" symphony, and, for once, the well-dressed crowd woke up to an appreciation of great music. But I am not going to praise them much on that account. The "Pastoral" symphony has a story to tell in which children can take an interest, and tells it in a manner simple enough for infantine comprehension. So the Liverpool folk, who yawned over Mozart's "G minor," heard the pipings, rustic revelry, bird notes, storm noises, &c., of Beethoven's work with obvious pleasure, and applauded the symphony with nearly half as much energy as, a few minutes afterwards, they applauded M^{de}. Patti's "Within a mile of Edinbro' town." Gounod's exquisitely droll "Funeral March of a Marionette" and "Jeanne d'Arc" were other important features in this programme, but upon neither is it requisite to dilate, their merits having not long ago received adequate attention. The March, strange to say, excited very little interest—had the audience no sense of humour?—and the Cantata coming at the end of a very long concert, was not heard with the attention necessary to appreciate its character. Its performance, moreover, lay open to criticism, for the reason, perhaps, that all concerned were weary. Mr. Sims Reeves made his first appearance on this occasion (he was prevented by illness from taking part in "St. Paul"), and sang Benedict's "It is a charming girl I love," as well as Blumenthal's "Requital," with his old beauty of voice and style.

The third morning was devoted to Mr. Arthur Sullivan's "Light of the World," the performance of which was conducted by the composer in person, with Miss Wynne, Mdme. Patey, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, as most competent soloists. In this performance the Liverpool public showed a genuine interest, not only by attending in large numbers, but also by unmistakably hearty applause. Everybody must have heard of Mr. Sullivan as the composer of popular songs and this may have had something to do with the favour shown towards himself and his work by an audience strangely cold to the pretensions of masters less generally known. Happily, the favour was not misplaced. Mr. Sullivan deserves the reward due to a man of exceeding power; and "The Light of the World," whatever may be thought of its general design and character, is an oratorio that does credit to the present state of English art. The work is full of beautiful music, and bears on almost every page the impress of a master-hand. If, therefore, Mr. Sullivan has gained for his oratorio the ear of the general public by means of labour in a less elevated sphere, it is not only well for him but for the cause he represents. As performed at Liverpool, "The Light of the World" had the advantage of being considerably shortened. This was, of course, gained at the expense of music which, per se, deserved retention, but the choice was a choice of evils, and I am strongly convinced that Mr. Sullivan chose the less. Even in its abbreviated form, the oratorio is fully long, considering its prevalent sombre tone; but there can be no question that, now, it runs a fairer chance of general acceptance than at any previous time. The performance left very little to desire—nothing whatever as regards the solos, which were, from first to last, sung most admirably. I cannot well particularize without being invidious, nor, on the other hand, can I well resist the temptation to point out Miss Wynne's "Lord, why hidest Thou Thy face," Mdme. Patey's "God shall wipe away all tears," Mr. Reeves's "Refrain thy voice from weeping," and the rendering by Mr. Santley of the Christus music, as examples of vocal skill and expression that any four artists of any other nationality would find it hard to surpass, if not to equal. Among the chief successes of the morning was, also, the lovely unaccompanied quartett "Yea, though I walk," which had to be repeated in compliance with a general desire sanctioned by the Royal President of the Festival. The choral and orchestral portions of the work went smoothly; and taken altogether, the performance, like the music, deserved the applause lavished upon it. Neither Mdme. Patti nor Mr. Reeves were announced for the last evening concert, and, as it was known that the Duke of Edinburgh had left Liverpool, the attendance fell off very much. Songs were sung by Mdle. Albani, Mdme. Patey, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, but upon these I need not dwell. Neither is it important to describe minutely the execution of Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, and the overtures to "Euryanthe" and "Le Nozze di Figaro." On the other hand, attention must be given to a violin solo—Romance and Presto alla Tarantella—by Berthold Tours, which Mr. Carrodus played so brilliantly as to win an encore. This work is very effectively laid out for the instrument, besides having merits of a more exalted order, and such as are honourable to the composer. But the chief novelty was Mr. J. F. Barnett's "Lay of the Last Minstrel," a descriptive piece for orchestra. In each of the four movements, Mr. Barnett seeks to convey impressions the nature of which he indicates by quoting passages from Scott's poem. Thus, the first (Larghetto) takes us to "Fair Melrose;" the second (Romance) introduces "Lady Margaret and the Knight;" the third (Scherzo) brings before us the "Elfin Page;" and in the fourth (Chant Triumphant) we witness the "Triumph of Cranstoun." Work such as this must be fascinating to a composer of imaginative power, and one cannot be surprised that the new orchestral piece shows Mr. Barnett at his best. All the movements are written with great fluency and fancy; the scoring is varied and picturesque, and the descriptive power ample for its intended purpose. The Larghetto, which employs the pedal notes of the organ, has a peculiarly rich and solemn effect; a complete contrast being attained in the Scherzo, one of those Mendelssohnic movements that are instinct with the spirit of "tricksiness." Not to dwell more minutely upon a work certain to be speedily heard in London, let me add that its reception at Liverpool was most favourable; the Scherzo having to be repeated, and the composer reaping a harvest of applause. At the close of the concert, Sir Julius Benedict, who had brought the enterprise, as regards musical results, to such a successful issue, received an "ovation" than which no tribute was ever more deserved.

The profit of the Festival amounted to about £940, a sum afterwards made up to £1,000, and divided amongst certain medical charities. This must be considered a fair success; but I trust, for the credit of Liverpool, that the next gathering will make gains in a more legitimate Festival way. It is not well when oratorio performances barely pay their expenses. Concerning the competitions of choirs and soloists which took place in St. George's Hall on the Saturday, I need only remark that they showed a good deal of general musical culture; the Liverpool Representative Choir, winner of the £100 prize, being a really excellent body of voices in admirable training.

Like its predecessor at Liverpool, the Leeds Festival was started under circumstances of difficulty. Although the idea of holding it was supported, with all the influence of his position, by Mayor Marsden, and a large guarantee fund soon made pecuniary matters easy, the course of preparation by no means ran smooth. Into the minutiae of the squabbles that imperilled the Festival I shall not enter. They are past and gone; besides which comforting fact, a stranger can hardly know enough of local "ins and outs" to do justice to such a subject. Suffice it that the Festival took place, spite of all obstacles, and was carried through to a successful end. The general programme contained a long list of patrons more or less distinguished; a still longer list of guarantors, and the usual array of officials. But over all these I shall pass to get at the much more important fact, musically speaking, that Sir Michael Costa accepted the post of conductor, and gave the Festival the advantage of his remarkable power as a disciplinarian and directing chief. In other respects the personnel was of the best. M. Saindon "led" an orchestra of ninety-three performers, including most of those who have long been associated with Sir M. Costa's successes; the chief vocalists were Mesdames Titiens, Singelli, Alvsleben, Trebelli, and Patey; Messrs. Lloyd, Bentham, Campanini, Perkins, Agnesi, and Santley (Mr. Sims Reeves was prevented by illness from appearing); while the chorus consisted of 266 picked voices, of which Leeds contributed 143, Bradford 45, Halifax 14, and many other West Riding towns a smaller number. Dr. Spark presided at Messrs. Gray and Davison's splendid organ, and the very important place of librarian was jointly filled by Mr. J. Peck, of Exeter Hall, and Mr. Pheasant. In this combination of ability and experience all the elements of success were found, and when I add that the magnificent Leeds Town Hall offered a locale second to none in the kingdom, it is clear that the Festival could not have been better equipped. The programme had even less of novelty in it than that of Liverpool, but the committee made so good an explanation, based upon the shortness of time between the resolve to hold a Festival and its actual realization, that criticism was disarmed. They took care, also, to choose works which, if not absolutely new, were new to Leeds; and, moreover, they promised to behave better another year. The committee deserve praise for having thus made the best of a difficult situation, and for frankly expressing regret that no more could be done. Sir Michael Costa thoroughly rehearsed the less familiar items in the programme on Monday and Tuesday, October 12 and 13, and on Wednesday, the concerts began with "St. Paul," in presence of a large audience, including many notables of the town and county. At Leeds, as at Liverpool, Mendelssohn's earlier oratorio thus took the place usually filled by "Elijah," and on both occasions the change appeared to meet with universal approval. The fact may encourage other concert givers to depose "Elijah" from a position which, if not too distinguished for its merits, puts an obstacle in the way of other deserving works. It should not be forgotten that if we had two more oratorios as popular as the "Messiah" and "Elijah," our Festivals would be stereotyped—a most undesirable consummation. The performance of "St. Paul" was, generally, very good indeed; the solos, by Mdlle. Titiens, Mdme. Patey, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, giving entire satisfaction; while the chorus at once made known their power to sustain the repute of Yorkshire voices and culture. Great things were expected from the picked men and women whom Mr. Broughton, the chorus-master, had drilled so assiduously, but the result surpassed all anticipations. A finer body of voices never came under my observation. For grandeur and quality of tone, precision, and enthusiasm, the Leeds chorus was simply unapproachable, and every work in which they took part seemed to be full of previously unsuspected beauty, then, for the first time brought out. The chief features in the evening programme, which also attracted a goodly audience, were Mozart's "Jupiter" symphony, the overtures to "Euryanthe" and "Zampa," Sir W. S. Bennett's descriptive overture "Paradise and the Peri," Mendelssohn's Concerto for violin, splendidly played by M. Sainton, and an elaborate, unaccompanied Chorus "Deutschland and Freedom evermore," the work of Dr. Spark. As all but the last are familiar I may pass them over to say that Dr. Spark's chorus is a setting of a translated German poem, which represents a Teutonic warrior calling for the strains of his country's composers, ere setting out in defence of Fatherland. Incidentally, upon this subject, let me say that if the Teutonic warriors would keep their migratory bands at home to play the strains in question we should all have occasion to look approvingly upon such patriotic ardour. Dr. Spark's music is respectable, if not particularly striking, but its performance suffered through a serious fall in pitch, a tendency to drop being the one weakness of the chorus. Two clever part-songs by Henry Smart were also in the programme, and songs were contributed by Mdlle. Titiens, Mdme. Alvsleben, Mdlle. Singelli, Mdme. Patey, Mr. Bentham, and Signor Agnesi.

The second morning concert presented a familiar selection, and the Yorkshire amateurs, who are real amateurs and not mere lovers of what they already know, expressed comparative indifference about it, by sending a diminished audience to the Hall. In the first place, Dr. Spark played Handel's Concerto in G minor for organ and orchestra—the best known and most popular of the set to which it belongs. This old work is not adapted to exhibit the resources of an instrument such as the one at Leeds, but Dr. Spark made good use of the opportunity afforded by a masterly Cadenza, and produced effects of real and striking merit. He was applauded at the close of his task. After this came a long selection from "Israel in Egypt," including the sequence of Plague choruses, the whole ending with Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang." Comment upon these works would be altogether superfluous, nor is it necessary to tell how the solos were rendered by such artists as those already named. A word or two is, however, due to the chorus, who, in the grand music of Handel, surpassed all previous efforts. There was a strict rule against encores, but the "Hailstone" had to be repeated in spite of it. Nothing could resist the electric effect of that splendid ensemble. Per contra, the voices dropped in "He sent a thick darkness;" illustrating the old truth that our nearest approach to perfection falls far short of the mark. But, faults apart, the choral display was a thing to remember for a life-time. Such vigour, sonority, and precision were phenomenal. The evening concert attracted a large audience, thanks to Mr. Henry Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron," with which it began. My readers scarcely need telling that this Cantata, written for the Birmingham Festival of 1864, had been performed on several occasions in different parts of the country, though never heard in Leeds. It is equally superfluous to insist that the work, on the score of merit as of novelty, deserved the honour of a place in the Festival programme. Its story is wild and exciting enough to call out all a composer's imaginative power, and Mr. Smart has undoubtedly met its demands. His music displays an unfailing wealth of tune; it is expressive and descriptive in a high degree, written with a masterly hand, and marked by vivid, yet always appropriate colour. As examples might be cited, the tenor air, "The full moon is beaming," the chorus of Sea Maidens, "Hail to thee, child of earth," and the two choruses of Storm Spirits,—all admirable specimens of Mr. Smart's fancy and skill. But the entire Cantata is worthy to take high rank, and, though its execution can never be an easy task, when English music is estimated according to its worth, the "Bride of Dunkerron" will have honours paid it more frequently than now. Unhappily, the Leeds performance left much to desire, and was by many degrees the worst of the Festival. Neither band, chorus, nor principals were perfect, though as regards the last, I must exempt from censure Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Santley, by whom the solo tenor and bass music was capitally given. What caused so marked and general a falling off cannot easily be pointed out, but defective rehearsal—that fertile source of disappointment and disaster—was mayhap to blame. The audience, nevertheless, recognised the full merit of the Cantata, and, much too generous to visit the sins of the performers upon the composer, called Mr. Smart forward that he might receive a well-earned tribute of applause. The remainder of the concert was taken up by the "Pastoral" symphony; the overture to "La Gazza Ladra," and Sullivan's Overture di Ballo; the March from "Tannhäuser," and some vocal selections, which call for no particular remark.

The Town Hall contained a larger crowd than ever on Friday morning, when Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist" was given, in association with Rossini's "Stabat Mater." Had this been the only instance in which a special audience assembled, I should attribute the phenomenon to the unflinching attractiveness of the "Stabat." But the week's experience made it clear enough that Leeds amateurs have the spirit of the ancient Athenians in them. They are eager to meet with "some new thing," and, no matter whether it was the "Bride of Dunkerron," "St. John the Baptist," or, as we shall presently see, "Paradise and the Peri," they came out in unwonted numbers. Truly, a healthy state of things!—one which, if it spread over the country, would open up a new musical age, fairer than any that has gone before. After the well-nigh exhaustive notice of Mr. Macfarren's oratorio which appeared in the Musical Times, for December last, à propos of the original performance at Bristol, discussion is unnecessary. Nevertheless, I must record the fact that more and more experience of the work more and more confirms every good impression conveyed in the first instance. It is a really great thing, this English oratorio; one of which we have all a right to be proud; one that will be handed down among the heirlooms of the nation. Speaking thus positively of the future is not rash, because connoisseurs on the one part, and the general public on the other, unite to acclaim "St. John the Baptist," and such unanimity has a special significance as showing that Mr. Macfarren, while labouring in the highest sphere of music, has exerted a power over feelings shared by all. "St. John the Baptist" is a work of consummate skill, but it is also an epic to the numbers of which every heart vibrates. Things of this sort do not easily die. Need it be said that the audience received the oratorio with delight? If Bristol welcomed it heartily, and London gave it an imperial reception, such amateurs as those of Leeds were not likely to be behind-hand. Nor were they, and I only regret that Mr. Macfarren was not present to receive such honours as rarely fall to the lot of a composer. The performance was splendid: hardly a fault making itself perceptible. In the hands of Mdme. Alvsleben, Mdme. Patey, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, the solos were absolutely safe, while, very early in the week, the choir showed itself full of enthusiasm. Nothing could be finer than the concerted numbers for male voices; save, perhaps those, such as "My soul, praise the Lord," and "What went ye out into the wilderness for to see?" wherein the entire force of the magnificent ensemble was called upon. In effect, the performance went beyond the range of criticism, and called solely for admiration. Of the "Stabat Mater," which followed, nothing need be said here. The familiar choruses were all smoothly given, and artists like Mdme. Titiens, Mdme. Trebelli, Signor Campanini, and Signor Agnesi, could very well answer for the solos. The last evening concert, chiefly devoted to Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri," drew together the largest audience of the week, not only every seat in the spacious Hall being occupied, but every place in the lobbies where a seat could be extemporized. This was one of the most remarkable features connected with the Festival, though not so noteworthy perhaps, as the attention shown by the vast crowd to music which, full of beauty as it is, cannot well be appreciated at first sight. The interest so keenly exhibited throughout the earlier portions of the work obviously flagged when the third part began; but the result was expected by all who knew that just there Schumann's genius tires, and he labours on to the end without spontaneity and freshness. The third part of "Paradise and the Peri" will ever be the chief barrier to its popularity, but cannot stand in the way of an appreciation of the rest of the work, which so grows in charm upon all who study it with a mind frankly open to receive impressions. I use the word "study" with emphasis, because Schumann brought a profundity of thought and feeling to the illustration of Moore's poem such as the poem itself makes no claim to possess, and the result does not lie on the surface. "The meaning of song lies deep," says Carlyle, and whoever would enjoy "Paradise and the Peri" to the fullest extent must know it thoroughly. This, also, was one of the successful performances of the Festival; the choir showing most commendable acquaintance with the work; and the soloists, Mdme. Titiens, Mdme. Alvsleben, Mdme. Trebelli, Mr. Lloyd and Signor Agnesi being thoroughly efficient. A short miscellaneous selection followed, including the overtures to "Guillaume Tell" and "Masaniello."

The "Messiah" was given on Saturday morning to a surprisingly small audience, but with unparalleled grandeur of effect. Yorkshire choristers revel in Handel's greatest work, and, on this occasion, they were worthy of it. More cannot be said. At the close of the oratorio, the High Sheriff (Admiral Duncombe) complimented the performers, especially Sir M. Costa, upon the success of their efforts, and with "God save the Queen," the Festival came to an end; a popular concert at cheap prices in the evening being outside the scheme. In conclusion, I must congratulate Leeds upon a marked success. The charities benefited by the sum of £1,300; the amateurs made the acquaintance of three valuable works; the artistic credit of the town rose to the highest point, and a wealth of musical resource was displayed, the existence of which strangers at least had no reason to suspect.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CONCERTS.

In calling attention to the full Prospectus of these concerts as it appeared in the October number of the Musical Times, it need scarcely be pointed out that reasons exist why we must speak with a certain reserve. It is for others to judge the enterprise, and to praise or censure as seems to them most fitting. The public have yet to show in what degree it appeals to their sympathies; but the Press has already, in many cases at least, had its say, and bestowed a most encouraging amount of approval. Without an exception, the Prospectus has been commented upon in an appreciative spirit, not only with regard to the magnitude of the scheme, but also to the resources brought together for carrying it out, and the artistic importance of the result. More the Directors could not expect, and it is unnecessary to add that they regard the reception given to the announcement of their enterprise as a happy augury of that general support, without which the enterprise itself cannot be brought to a successful issue. But while we must leave to others the task of awarding praise or blame, there are some observations which may be made here without any offence against good taste. In the first place, it deserves to be noted that this is the only example of a concert scheme which presents a complete educational course, and covers the entire domain of the art, that province excepted which appertains to chamber music. Classicists of a very straight-laced type may perhaps object to this, and hold the more popular branches of the enterprise—those entertainments, for example, which are to take place on Monday and Saturday evenings—as somewhat derogatory to the character of the concerts as a whole. Such an idea can only be harboured by critics who fail to recognise any likings but their own; and who fail, also, to appreciate the fact that the public cannot be turned into connoisseurs by the wand of a magician. The greatest mistake possible in music is made when forms of art that appeal only to advanced tastes are sought to be crammed down the throats of people who have not got beyond the elements of culture. All such attempts must necessarily fail, but their results are not merely negative. They lead to repugnance, and thus become a positive evil. The Albert Hall Concerts are intended to work upon a very different principle. Recognising the necessity for gradual action, they provide entertainment which the “masses” can appreciate and enjoy—without descending to illegitimate forms of art—and seek, by presenting the best music of its class, to create a taste for that which is next above it in the scale. In this manner alone can the public be educated to a higher appreciation, and it was thus that the late M. Jullien, whose services to art have never been properly estimated, carried on throughout the country an educational campaign productive of greater results than those which would have attended any number of severely classical performances. The Popular nights at the Albert Hall will, therefore, have a significance beyond mere general attractiveness. There is much in Mrs. Glasse’s well-known direction, “First catch your hare,” and if the masses of the people are drawn within the range of the Albert Hall operations, no doubt need be entertained of wide-spread good effects. As regards that part of the scheme which deals with the higher branches of music little need be said here, because nobody questions its utility as a means of extending the knowledge of great works among those who have learned to appreciate their kind. A word is due, nevertheless, to the prominence of English and modern German music in the programme—a feature which the Directors regard as certain to be productive of excellent results. Many attempts have been made to give English music a definite place in concert schemes, but they have all proved more or less failures, either through being in advance of their time, or through relying solely upon such music as an attraction. At the Albert Hall these dangers do not threaten. Performances of English music cannot be premature after we have seen four English oratorios produced, and well received, in a single year, while, the concerts now to be given are only one branch of an enterprise which has many. We may look, therefore, for specially good results in the present case, assuming, of course, that our native composers avail themselves of the opportunity afforded. With regard to the “Wagner nights,” it must be obvious that any attempt to ignore the development of orchestral and other music would be false and short-sighted policy. Timid conservatives of the art may exclaim that another door is about to be opened to all manner of heresies; but, even assuming that modern German art is a heresy, it is better to make the public acquainted with it. There is nothing so mischievous as the concealment of a bug-bear when it is known to exist. In the dark it is a much more hideous monster than appears when some courageous individual strikes a match and goes boldly up to it. Probably if the “bogies” of modern music be thus faced, it will not be found a very appalling thing after all, even by those who would now have us enforce a strict quarantine against it. At any rate, the Albert Hall Concerts will help to settle this matter by increasing public knowledge with regard to it, and enabling amateurs to arrive at conclusions based upon something more trustworthy than report and prejudice.

With these general remarks we leave the Prospectus to speak for itself, confident that the enterprise it heralds will be judged fairly upon the merits set forth, and not less confident that everything will be done to deserve success.

We are desirous of calling attention to a couple of excellent photographs which have been forwarded to us, representing the most eminent living and deceased musicians. One, entitled “The Heroes of German Music,” from 1740 to 1867, makes an exceedingly effective picture; Bach, with his fingers upon the organ, surrounded by Beethoven, Gluck, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Schubert, &c., appearing in the orchestra, whilst other celebrities, both male and female, are most artistically posed beneath. The other group, “The Heroes of the Music of Italy, France, England,” &c., from 1450 to 1868, includes most of those who have worthily represented music in those countries, from a German point of view; although perhaps we may be inclined to question whether England has not produced other artists worthy of a place with Purcell, Burney and Field. All the likenesses are exceedingly striking; and we cordially commend these interesting pictures both to professors and amateurs, as most reliable portraits of those who, either as composers or executants, have shed a lustre upon the art.

EVEN with the large space which we invariably devote to Reviews, we find it impossible to do more than make a very small selection from the music forwarded to us. It would be unnecessary to state this very obvious fact were we not inundated with letters urging us to notice pieces sent “three or four months back;” and on two or three occasions we have been politely requested by composers not to review certain pieces should we receive them, because they desire to make “some alterations” in them. We have before alluded to this matter in these columns, and only do so now lest we should be accused of discourtesy in not replying to the numerous requests made to us. In future, however, we should counsel all who send us works for review to remember that—as letters once dropped into the post-box become the property of the Postmaster-General—compositions forwarded to us for notice must be considered in the undisturbed possession of those to whose custody they have been voluntarily committed.

THE ceremony of unveiling the statue of Balfe, by Sir Michael Costa, which took place on the 25th September, in the vestibule of Drury-lane Theatre, drew forth an enthusiastic speech from Mr. C. L. Gruneisen, who could not have been more eloquent in his praises of the composer had he been the greatest genius of modern times. The popularity of Mr. Balfe in his day should not blind even his personal friends to the fact that it has been gradually diminishing ever since; and many who were present at the interesting ceremonial to which we have referred could not but feel that, in spite of the recent attempt to create a success for “Il Talismano,” his compositions have now but small interest for opera-goers. Strange, indeed, would it be if a statue, which should glorify a man's living fame, prove a monument in memory of his deceased works!

A PAMPHLET, addressed to the Shareholders of the Crystal Palace Company, by Francis Fuller, has been forwarded to us, in which the reasons for the rupture between a large portion of the Shareholders and the present Directors are duly set forth; and we have also received a letter from Mr. Fuller, urging upon us the necessity of expressing an opinion "whether our chief place of public amusement shall contribute to the deterioration or the elevation of the character of our people." As this journal is exclusively devoted to music, and the furtherance of its best interests, we do not, of course, feel justified in entering at all into the merits of this controversy: the advisability of holding Poultry, Cat, and Donkey Shows in a building originally intended as a Temple of Art, is certainly open to serious consideration, but this is not the place in which to discuss the matter. Upon the conduct of the department, however, which does come within our province, we cannot speak too strongly. Whatever may have been the mismanagement in the other attractions of the Palace, there can be no question that Music has been nobly represented; for not only have the established classical works received a more perfect rendering than had ever before been heard in this country, but new compositions have been introduced to the public which, but for this Institution, might never perhaps have been known. However reform may creep in, therefore, Mr. Manns may be safely left at the head of his fine orchestra to continue that career which, to use the words of Mr. Fuller, has already contributed so much to the "elevation of the character of our people."

MR. G. F. McDONOGH, Lessee of the Royal Amphitheatre, Holborn, must have somewhat original ideas both of the inherent value of a composer's instrumentation of his own work, and the right which he possesses over his property. It appears that M. Hervé wrote to the newspapers disclaiming all connection with the production of his Opera-bouffe, "Melusine," at the above-named establishment, and especially stated that he was not responsible for the orchestral score used on the occasion. To this Mr. McDonogh replied that he made what he thought a liberal offer to the composer for his original band parts, which he declined, and that he then "placed the work in the experienced hands of M. Audibert." So cool a method of overcoming a slight difficulty reminds us of the country theatrical manager who, on being informed that the London "Star" announced to perform Hamlet had been taken suddenly ill, remarked, in the most business-like manner, that it was of no consequence, as it was easy enough to "get some other fellow to do it."

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE first of the Saturday Afternoon Concerts for the present season was given on the 10th ult., before an unusually large audience. Mendelssohn's Overture in C (Op. 24), known to pianists by the composer's excellent four-hand arrangement, commenced the programme, and might be considered a positive novelty, seeing that, although Mendelssohn had sufficiently declared his conception of the instrumental colouring best suited for the piece by first scoring it for a small wind orchestra, and afterwards for a military band, Mr. Manns has arranged it for a full orchestra. We have no occasion to repeat our opinion of these "transformations," and need only say that, in every respect, the work has been well done; and, judged by the applause, that the audience was not of our mode of thinking. Herr Wagner's composition, strangely enough termed "A Faust Overture," has original thought and bold instrumentation, but it passed somewhat coldly with the audience. Mr. Franklin Taylor's performance of Sir Sterndale Bennett's Pianoforte Concerto in F minor, showed his executive powers to the utmost advantage, and he was loudly applauded. Mr. E. Lloyd and Mr. Santley were the singers. At the second concert on the 17th ult., Dr. Hans von Bülow gave a fine rendering of Liszt's "Fantaisie Hongroise," music most thoroughly suited for the display of his exceptional talents, and being encored, he gave with his usual fluency the same composer's "Ronde des Lutins." Mr. Gadsby's Overture, "The Witches' Frolic," although marked "first time" in the programme, was produced at one of the concerts of the "British Orchestral Society." It is a clever work, and was well received. The vocalists were: Madame Campobello-Sinico and Miss A. Sterling. Mr. A. Manns conducted with his accustomed efficiency.

THE Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden Theatre have been crowded during the past month, and there can be little doubt that the attraction is sufficiently great to warrant their continuance until Christmas. That even the introduction of "Classical Nights" cannot bring these entertainments within the province of artistic criticism must be apparent to all who have visited the Theatre and witnessed the distracting influences which surround the few music-lovers in what is, strangely enough, called the "Promenade." As we cannot believe, therefore, that they can do any good to the art, let us hope that they will at least do no harm; and, seeing that they give continuous employment to some of our best orchestral performers at a proverbially dull time of the year, we may chronicle their success with feelings of toleration, if not of gratification.

MR. WHITNEY, the American Bass, who made so successful an appearance here three years ago, will be in England again early in the present month, and will make his first appearance at the Royal Albert Hall Concerts, on Thursday the 12th inst., in the "Messiah."

WE read in the Times of India that Dr. Maclean, a Madras civilian, has at length elected to resign the service, having made final choice of the appointment of organist at Eton College, the duties of which he entered upon about two years ago. The appointment was offered to him while in India, when he took leave of absence; and after officiating for some time at Eton, he found the duties there more congenial, and probably a residence in England more agreeable, than either duties or residence in India.

THE annual evening concert of the Pupils of the London Society for Teaching the Blind to Read was given at the Institution, Upper Avenue Road, Regent's Park, on the 5th ult. The selection from Macfarren's Oratorio, "St. John the Baptist," was excellently rendered, the training of all the vocalists reflecting the utmost credit upon their teacher, Mr. Edwin Barnes, who has been so long and honourably connected with the Society. A feature in the second part was the performance of Liszt's Fantasia on subjects from "Le Prophète," by Mr. J. Lea Summers, which was most enthusiastically applauded; and Mr. F. E. Barnes's song, "The Path through the Snow," and Hatton's popular "Tar's Song," were redemanded. The conductor was Mr. W. E. Clare.

MADemoiselle JOHANNA LEVIER, a Soprano who has made great successes on the Continent, has just arrived in England, and will make her début on the first Classical Night of the Royal Albert Hall Concerts, on Wednesday, the 11th inst.

WE have recently had an opportunity of inspecting an invention by Messrs. G. and A. Webb, Pianoforte Manufacturers, of Croydon, which is to be applied to the "hopper" of upright instruments. The blocking of the hammer from damp—so common in this class of pianofortes—is by a very simple contrivance, rendered impossible, and both a firm touch and perfect repetition ensured. Another advantage is that, after years of wear, the touch can be effectually restored, without a re-adjustment of the key-frame, and at a very small cost. So important an improvement should meet with general encouragement.

THE results of the recent Michaelmas Examinations of the Church Choral Society and College of Church Music, London, are as follows:—Senior Choral Fellows: S. Corbett, Mus.B., St. John's College, Cambridge; Frederick Iliffe, Mus.B., New College, Oxford. Choral Fellows: W. H. Birch, Amersham Hall School, Reading; R. W. Coldwell, New College, Oxford; John Skipsey, Penshurst, Kent; T. C. Webb, St. Matthews', Nottingham. The examiners were: Section a, the Warden, and Edward Dearle, Mus.D. Cantab; Section b, B. Agutter, Mus.B., Oxon.; Section c, W. H. Sangster, Mus.B., Oxon.; Section d, J. Gordon Saunders, S.C.F., Mus.B., Oxon. The Harmony prize was not awarded, the necessary standard not being reached by the candidates.

WE are glad to learn that the Directors of the Royal Albert Hall Concerts intend to increase the facilities for the arrival and departure of their audiences, an arrangement having been made with Her Majesty's Commissioners and the Council of the Royal Horticultural Society to open the lower entrance to the Exhibition Galleries (opposite the South Kensington Museum), which will enable all those who travel by the Metropolitan Railway to pass to and from the Concerts under cover, through the arcades of the Exhibition.

ON Friday, the 2nd ult., an evening concert, under the direction of Mr. Prenton, was given in the Vestry Hall, Chelsea, to inaugurate the Winter Session of the Chelsea Literary and Scientific Institute. The following artists were engaged:—Madame Denham-Mori, Miss Claremont, Miss Ada Lester, Mr. Alfred Mori, Mr. Charles White, Mr. Frank Brough, Mr. H. P. Matthews, and Mr. Prenton. Madame Denham-Mori was greatly applauded for her artistic rendering of Ardit's Vocal Valse, "L'Ardita," and her soprano voice was heard to much advantage in the several concerted pieces performed during the evening. Miss Claremont sang "The Skipper and his boy," and being encored, substituted "She wore a wreath of roses." Miss Ada Lester was most enthusiastically received for a brilliant rendering of a pianoforte solo; and Messrs. C. White, A. Mori, and F. Brough were very successful in the songs allotted them. Mr. Prenton was highly effective in Russell's "Man the Life-Boat," and Robin Hood's air from "The May Queen." Mr. H. P. Matthews contributed some buffo songs. Mr. Brough was an efficient accompanist, and at the commencement of each part of the programme, played with great taste a pianoforte solo.

AT the annual meeting of the Church Congress, which took place during the past month at Brighton, the subject of "The Management and Training of Parochial Choirs and the Organisation of Diocesan Musical Festivals" was introduced by the Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley in an able paper. After drawing an amusing picture of the village choir of fifty years ago, he gave a vivid description of their gradual improvement; and, condemning the use of "services" in ordinary parish churches, expressed an opinion that every person in the congregation with any ear and voice should join in the hymns. He was followed by the Rev. J. Powell Metcalfe, who read an interesting paper, strongly advocating the establishment of Choral gatherings, with a triennial diocesan festival. After dwelling upon the manner in which the preliminary meetings should be conducted, he said, while urging the selection of moderately difficult music for the festival:—

"It must surely be the ever present desire and aim of those who have the management of Choral Festivals, that the gatherings shall leave behind them pleasant memories to the better choirs. And to the inferior choirs, the selection of moderately difficult music is distinctly advantageous. With such, the Association choir-master while showing 'how the music is to be sung at the festival' can get in a greater amount of sound instruction than with the very easy music, and, moreover, with it, the benefit is greater than can be derived from the example of the better singers. If, in the judgment of the Association Choir-master, any portion of the service is beyond the powers of a choir—by no means let that choir attempt to get it up—only let its members one and all be most strictly enjoined, by those having authority over them, not to utter their own noises, while that portion is being sung on the festival day. The music having been selected, printed, and distributed to the choirs, who have expressed the wish to join in the festival, and have, moreover, paid their subscription and music money, the getting up of the music will commence. As a preliminary, it will be found most advisable, that at various centres the service should be sung over in completeness by a quartet, at least of competent voices, and the special points in it be commented upon by the musical director of the Association—such comments to be subsequently embodied in a paper, and supplied to choirs—this before the assembled home-teachers of the associated choirs, so that they themselves may be posted up in the one style, before beginning to work up their respective singers. Though much has been said against hard and fast rules, it could but be right to require all home teachers of associated choirs to attend one at least of these preliminary setting-out meetings. And here it may be said, once for all, that the central authorities must make up their minds at all times sternly and uncompromisingly to defend the striving earnest choirs—be they large or be they small—from the careless, indolent, slipshod choir, whose one idea of a choral festival is a day's outing and a riotous jollification. If a choir cares not to take the steps, the mass of choirs are most willing to take to render the preparation for the Festival as complete as possible, better, and surely fairer, that that choir should withdraw at once. There can be no true association between earnestness and carelessness."

The following observations, too, are worthy of being quoted:—

"Let me in conclusion say that the work of Choral Associations must not be supposed to begin and end with preparation for, and holding of, Choral Festivals. The musical authorities must consider themselves a standing counsel for choral matters, and must look for occasions to aid, all the year through. And especially must they endeavour to promote the practice of secular and non-church music amongst choirs, not for itself, but as a means to the one end. There is no custom that tends more to keep our choirs from rising to their proper level—than doing all the teaching over music for the Church Service—Firstly, it has a most deadening effect upon the singers. Boys, while boys they remain, must needs be sometimes scolded, men must be kept amused—scolding and pleasantry are equally out of place at a practice of church music. Again, we must never forget that our choirs are leaders of our people's praise, in heart if not in voice, and that, therefore, all sung in Church must at least be 'understood of the people,' if not audibly joined in by them. The music of the Church Service is not—and ought not to be—sufficient to keep up the musical interest of the singers. Further, no good can be done by church music that comes from the mouth as a mere threadbare lesson; something more than mere notes is needed to excite the heart-sympathy of the people, and the service must be entirely within the grasp of the choir, to enable them to obtain this all-important 'something more than notes.'"

On the last day of the Congress an excellent paper by Dr. Stainer, "On the Progressive Character of Church Music," with illustrations, was read by the author. After urging upon his hearers the advisability of cultivating a feeling of catholicity in art, he concluded his eloquent lecture thus:—"I believe that the adoption of these views would go far to heal that unfortunate division of Church musicians into 'Anglicans' and 'Gregorians' which now exists. For a larger liberality and a little more knowledge would show the Anglican how much he loses by not having gone through a course of education in plainsong; and would show the Gregorian how often he is misled by a blind worship of square and diamond-shaped notes. It is Zion, that bringest good tidings.

CO. NEW YORK: J. L. PETERS.

CATHEDRAL PSALTER.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER AND CO., in acknowledging the remarkable favour with which the first issue of this Psalter has been received, beg to announce that they are preparing an entirely new Edition, in two sizes, with more distinct accents and other signs, the type for which has been cast specially for this work.

Also in compliance with the desire of the Editors, they have adopted an asterisk as a breath mark. The comma will in future only indicate a slight pause without taking breath. This improvement will, they confidently believe, render their Psalter the most valuable means of ensuring good chanting. The difficulty that has hitherto been found in determining where the breath should be taken is well known to Clergy, Choirmasters, and Organists, and the advantage of having this settled on an intelligible basis cannot fail to be appreciated.

A reference to the subjoined examples will more clearly show the advantage of this system :—

I will love thee O Lord my strength * the Lord is my stony rôck, and | my de- | -fence: my Saviour, my God, and my might, in whom I will trust * my buckler, the horn also of my sal- | vation | and my | refuge.

For lo, thine enemies O Lord * lo, thine éne- | -mies shall | perish: and all the workers of wicked- | -ness shall | be de- | stroyed.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER AND Co. have only to add that any inconvenience attendant upon making changes in a book which has already been largely adopted will, they feel confident, be more than counterbalanced by the valuable improvements incorporated in the forthcoming Editions.

always dangerous to get between two contending armies, and I have already received a few shots from both sides for having taken this view of the merits of both and the faults of both. But I look forward to the day when I shall draw round me so many recruits from both the contending parties, that the breach between them shall be insensibly healed."

MR. HENRY STIEHL has been appointed Conductor of the Philharmonic Society, Belfast.

GERMAN contemporary composers have, it would appear, not much cause to complain of their productions being neglected by their countrymen. According to the Berlin Musikzeitung Echo, a great number of more or less important new works are at present being performed, or are promised for this winter, at Berlin and other centres of musical life. Among these are mentioned some Programme-Symphonies by Hofmann and J. Raff—both highly spoken of by the above journal—and also an Oratorio entitled "Christus," by Friedrich Kiel, which attracted much general attention by its first performance, and is now being rehearsed, with a view to an early production, by no less than five of the leading towns of Germany. At the Royal Opera House of Berlin a new opera, "Cesario," by Herr Taubert is in course of preparation, and will, it is said, be followed by Rubinstein's "Die Maccabæer." From the same musical organ we learn that Herr Richard Wagner has undertaken to conduct, in conjunction with Franz Liszt, a series of concerts during the ensuing winter at Vienna and Budapest. The receipts are to go towards defraying the expenses of the National Theatre at Bayreuth, now in course of construction, and at these concerts portions from the third part of the, already so much talked of, "Nibelungen-Trilogy," called the "Dusk of the Gods," will be heard for the first time.

A CONCERT for the benefit of the sufferers from the disastrous fires in Meiningen and Moellen (Germany), is to be given by the German Gymnastic Society, in the large Hall of the Institution, St. Pancras Road, King's Cross, on the 7th inst. Several of the most eminent artists have kindly promised their assistance.

WE regret to announce that the Dean and Chapter of Worcester have refused the use of the Cathedral for the Festival of the Three Choirs, which was to have been held in that city next year. The following is the correspondence which has taken place on the subject, by which our readers will perceive that, strangely enough, the fact of the restoration of the Cathedral is dwelt upon as the principal reason why the Festival should no longer take place there:

October 21st, 1874.

"DEAR SIR,—As Chairman of the Standing Committee of the Herefordshire Music Festival, I forward the reply made by the Dean and Chapter of Worcester to our resolutions lately made known to the public in your columns.—Yours faithfully,

JOHN H. ARKWRIGHT.

Chapter House, Worcester, 20th October, 1874.

SIR,—I am desired by the Dean and Chapter of Worcester to enclose to you, as Chairman of the Permanent Committee of the Hereford Festival, a copy of the answer forwarded to the Provisional Committee of the Triennial Musical Festival at Worcester, and to add that they should greatly regret any severance of the tie which has hitherto connected them with the Chapters of Hereford and Gloucester in this matter, and that nothing can be further from their minds than any idea of interfering in any way with the conduct of the Musical Festivals in those dioceses.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your very obedient Servant,

ALFRED C. HOOPER, Chapter Clerk.

J. H. Arkwright, Esq., Hampton Court, Leominster.

[COPY.]

The Dean and Chapter desire to acknowledge the application of the Provisional Committee of the Triennial Musical Festival at Worcester, for the use of the Cathedral next year for the meeting of the Three Choirs of Worcester, Gloucester, and Hereford, and to say that they have given to it the careful and respectful consideration to which it is justly entitled.

They are, in the first place, unable to accept the inference drawn by the Provisional Committee from the circumstances under which the appeal was made in 1870 for contributions towards the restoration of the Cathedral; and they claim for themselves entire freedom to deal with the question, after serious consideration, on its own merits.

They also feel that, while they are most reluctant to disappoint the wishes of many persons interested in the continuance of the Festivals on their present footing, they cannot disregard the fact that there is a large and increasing class who are prevented from attending the Festivals by a conscientious objection to the system on which they have been conducted for many years.

Having considered all the circumstances of the case, they deeply regret, that they are under the necessity of declining to comply with the request of the Provisional Committee for the use of the Cathedral.

The main grounds of their unanimous decision are the following:—

1. That the Cathedral having now been completely restored, and the nave, as well as the choir, having been devoted to the purposes of Divine worship, they no longer feel at liberty to transfer the charge and control of it to other hands.

2. That they are of opinion that musical performances, which are in connection with any religious service, and to which admission is given only by purchased tickets, should no longer take place in the Cathedral.

At the same time, feeling the importance of keeping up the meetings of the Three Choirs for the cultivation of sacred music, and of providing (so far as is now necessary) for the interests of the Charity, to which they have so long contributed, they believe that these objects may be better obtained by reverting to the general form under which the meetings of the Choirs were originally conducted.

They propose, therefore, in the month of September next, to hold, on two or more days, a Festival of Religious Services, which shall include the performance of sacred music of a high class by the united Choirs, with adequate assistance, vocal and instrumental, and sermons by preachers of eminence, advocating the cause of the Charity.

They will only add that they see nothing in this proposed change which will necessarily prevent them from still co-operating with the Chapters of Gloucester and Hereford, for the support of the Charity in which they have a common interest, and for the improvement of sacred music.

They trust that this course when considered by the public under all the circumstances of the case, will meet with general approval; and that they may obtain the support of the inhabitants of the City and Diocese in carrying it out.

(Signed) GRANTHAM M. YORKE, D.D., Dean."

Chapter House, Worcester, October 19th, 1874.

We need scarcely say that the reply of the Dean and Chapter has caused the utmost excitement in the city. A special meeting of the Stewards of the Festival has been held, and a remonstrance against the decision arrived at was proposed and carried, a Committee being appointed to take any steps that might be necessary, or to confer with the Chapter, if advisable. A public meeting has also been called to consider the matter.

A SUCCESSFUL concert took place at the Birkbeck Institution, on Wednesday evening the 14th ult., under the direction of Mr. Stedman. The artists were—Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Jessie Royd, Miss Dones, Miss Helen Standish, Miss M. Rock, Mr. Stedman, Mr. Theodore Distin, Mr. Henry Parker and Herr C. Oberthür. Miss Matilda Scott, in Coenen's "Lovely Spring," and Miss Jessie Royd, in "The Bird that came in Spring (Benedict)," won much applause, and received hearty encores. Miss Dones was, as usual, very successful in her singing of the "Raft" (Pinsuti), and Miss Helen Standish was encored in Rossini's "Di tanti palpiti." Miss Marianne Rock showed the result of careful study in her execution of Wallace's second Grand Polka de Concert. Mr. Stedman was heard to much advantage in "Tom Bowling," and also took part with Miss Scott in the duet from Balfe's "Talisman," "Take the Ring," and Herr Oberthür played in his usual masterly manner, and was highly appreciated. Mr. Henry Parker, who is a great favourite here, accompanied in a careful and artistic way. The theatre was full to overflowing.

THE first meeting of the new Association "for the Investigation and Discussion of subjects connected with the Art and Science of Music," is announced to take place on the 2nd inst., at the Beethoven Rooms, Harley Street, Cavendish Square. At five o'clock, a Paper "On extending the compass and increasing the tone of stringed instruments," by Dr. W. H. Stone, M.A., F.R.C.P., will be read by the author; and a quartett of stringed instruments, fitted with Dr. Stone's and Mr. Meeson's Elliptical Tension Bars, the Double Bass strung down to CCC, will be exhibited and played. R.H.M. Bosanquet, Esq., M.A., of St. John's College, Oxford, will also read a Paper on "Temperament, or the Division of the Octave."

UNIVERSITY INTELLIGENCE.—Oxford, October 24. First Examination for the Degree of Bachelor in Music. The following have satisfied the Examiners:—Bentley, John, New College (and of St. Ann's Street, Manchester); Birch, Edward H., New College (and of Notting Hill, London, W.); Bradley, Joseph, New College (and of High Street, Stalybridge); Cay, Francis, New College (and of Beds. Middle Class School); Cole, H. Cardini, New College (and of Hampstead Road, London, N.W.); Gower, John H., New Inn Hall (and of Windsor); Hartmann, Albert, F.O. unattached (and Bandmaster of H.M. 17th Lancers, Dundalk); Hill, Andrew T., St. Mary Hall (and of Cheam, Surrey); Holloway, Arthur S., Worcester College (and of Hemingford Road, London, N.); Howard, Samuel, New College (and of Rochdale Road, Manchester); Hullett, Charles H., St. Mary Hall (and of York Street, Portman Square, London, W.); Hunt, H. G. Bonavia, Christ Church (and of the Middle Temple, London, E.C.); Lister, Henry, New College (and of Islington, London, N.); Löhr, George, S.L., New College (and of Woburn Square, London); Lott, John B., New College (Assistant Organist, Canterbury); Morland, John, New College (and of St. Martin's, Leicester); Palmer, Walter H., New College (and of Lindfield, Weston-Super-Mare); Righton, John H., New College (and of Faringdon); Riseley, Thomas, Christ Church (and of Cheltenham College); Ströh, Frederick K., New College (and of Rosemount, Selkirk, N.B.); Troman, Thomas, New College (and of Smethwick); Williams, Charles L., New College (and of St. Columba's College, Rathfarnham, Dublin); Wrigley, James G., New College (and of Church Street, Blackpool). The examiners were—Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., M.A. Mus. Doc., Christ Church, Professor of Music; Charles W. Corfe, Mus. Doc., Christ Church, Choragus; and Edwin G. Monk, Mus. Doc., Exeter College.—Second Examination for the Degree of Bachelor in Music. The examination will be held early in Easter Term, 1875. All candidates at this examination, in addition to the necessary subjects, will be required to have a critical knowledge of the full scores of Beethoven's "Symphony in B flat;" Handel's "Ode for St. Cecilia's Day;" and Mozart's "Requiem." The Text Books are Ouseley's "Treatises on Harmony and Counterpoint," Berlioz, or Kastner, on "Instrumentation," either Burney's or Hawkins's "History of Music." The exercises of those candidates who propose to offer themselves at this examination, should be sent (for the approval of the Examiners) to the Professor of Music, at his residence, St. Michael's, Tenbury, at any time before February 1, 1875.

HARVEST Festival Services were held at St. Stephen's, South Kensington, on the 4th and 11th ult. The church was beautifully decorated with corn, fruit, flowers, &c., the font at the west end being a special feature. The services were fully choral, and at evensong, the Anthems, "The Heavens are telling," and "I will give thanks" (Mozart), were most effectively rendered by the choir, organ and orchestra; the latter, introduced for the first time, doubtless had the effect of attracting the immense congregation assembled. Mr. Albert Lowe presided at the organ and conducted the anthems, the organ accompaniments to which were played by his pupils, Mr. Bradshaw and Mr. Essex respectively. The Vicar, the Rev. J. P. Waldo, preached on both occasions.

AN interesting Festival Service was given by the College of Organists on Tuesday the 20th ult., in St. Paul's Cathedral. A large number of the Metropolitan Choirs gave their assistance, and the service was accompanied by Dr. Stainer with his usual skill and judgment. The prize "Service" by Mr. H. Trembath, Mus. Bac. (a setting of the Cantate and Deus misereatur), is an exceedingly clever work, and was well sung. Two prize anthems, one by Mr. Haydn Keeton, and the other by Mr. C. J. Frost, were also included in the service, and the hymns were sung to prize tunes by Mr. H. Stark and Mr. E. C. Winchester, the "Recessional" being given to an excellent tune by Mr. C. E. Stephens. Before the service, organ pieces were performed by Dr. Stainer, Mr. E. H. Turpin and Mr. H. Houseley, the last named gentleman playing an "Andante con grazia" of his own composition, which created a marked effect. There were nearly 10,000 persons present; and we have every reason to believe that the offertory, which was devoted to the fund of the College of Organists, amounted to a highly satisfactory sum. The Festival was under the careful conductorship of Mr. R. Limpus.

MR. J. J. HAITE, whose death has recently taken place, was well known as an excellent musician and composer. He was a prominent member of the late Society of British Musicians, under whose auspices many of his best works were produced. In the last few years of his life, he devoted his attention principally to choral works, and wrote two Oratorios, "Abraham's Sacrifice," and "The Song of the Year," both of which are published; also three Masses, two Operettas, and a quantity of choral music of minor importance.

A CONCERT was given by Mr. W. D. Sumner, at the Lammas Hall, Battersea, on Monday the 12th ult. The artists were—Miss Edith Blair, Miss Clara Buley, Mr. Stedman, Mr. T. Soper, Mr. G. Henry, and Fraulein Anna de Blanck, principal violinist of the Viennese Ladies' Orchestra. The clever playing of the last named lady was a great feature in the concert. The vocalists were very successful in their several solos; and the quartett "Mezza Notte," from "Martha," was excellently sung by Miss Blair, Miss Buley, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. Soper. Mr. Sumner was the accompanist.

IN the Prospectus of the Glasgow Choral Union for the Season 1874-5, we are glad to see that the services of a resident orchestra in the city are assured by a list of guarantors, which includes some highly influential names. There are to be twelve orchestral and four choral performances in the City Hall; and the following works are announced to be given during the season: Macfarren's Oratorio, "St. John the Baptist," Schumann's Cantata, "Paradise and the Peri," Brahms's "Song of Destiny," Handel's "Messiah," and Henry Smart's Cantata "Jacob." Some of the most talented vocalists are engaged, and the concerts are likely, in every respect, fully to sustain the high character which this Association has so legitimately earned. The conductor is Mr. H. A. Lambeth.

THE October concert of the St. George's Glee Union took place at the Pimlico Rooms on the 2nd ult., under the direction of Mr. T. Garside. The choral portion of the programme included "Awake, sweet love," "To the hill and the vales," "O Bird of Eve," "The Welcome Home," "Tramp Chorus," "The Last Rose of Summer." Songs by Miss Clara Buley, Miss F. Banks, Miss Spear, Mr. Jekyll and Mr. A. Mills were well received, and Miss Julia Augarde played two pianoforte solos, viz.: "Traums-wirren," Schumann, and "Prelude and Fugue," Mendelssohn, very effectively.

REVIEWS.

Mount Moriah. (The Trial of Abraham's Faith.) An Oratorio. Composed by J. Frederick Bridge, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

THE author of the present interesting work has but recently won his academical honours, and he loses no time in publicly vindicating his claims to the doctorate. The new oratorio has high pretensions, and we have pleasure in stating that these pretensions are in many respects fulfilled. The composition is framed on the Bach model, as exemplified in the settings of the Passions according to the texts of different Evangelists, and in the several works comprised under the title of Christmas Oratorio. The Biblical history of the Lord's behest to Abraham, the Patriarch's willing obedience, the preparation for the sacrifice of Isaac, and the Angel's enfranchisement of the purposed victim, and his enunciation of the heavenly promise to Abraham and his seed for ever, is set forth by a Narrator, whose part is assigned to a soprano voice, the speeches of Abraham, Isaac, and the Angel being respectively allotted to a bass, a tenor, and a contralto; and it is interspersed with reflective passages for solo voices or for chorus, the texts for which are drawn from Holy Writ. The narration is a very brief one, and, in the form under which it is presented, it is wholly without dramatic action and dramatic interest. The whole power of the work, hence lies in the reflective passages, which are necessarily and entirely of a didactic nature, and the difficulty must have been enormous to make a composition attractive, whose mainly prevailing, if not unexceptional, character was thus prescribed. The music displays Dr. Bridge's scholarship to advantage, his graceful power of melody, and his general command of harmonic and contrapuntal resources; but he has had no field for the display of dramatic ability, and it will not be till the appearance of some other work from his hand, that we shall be in a position to judge of his possession of this high faculty.

The first piece is called an Introduction; it is for instruments only, it fills two pages of the pianoforte arrangement, it is in the key of E minor, and its general character is solemn and majestic, though never noisy. No. 2 is a Chorus, "Blessed is the man," of an impressive but still tranquil character, fraught with the expression of trustful earnestness. The story is now opened by the Narrator in a Recitative, "It came to pass," at the close of which, Abraham reflects upon the heavenly help he has enjoyed, and on the duty this imposes to sacrifice what is dearest to his heart to the Divine demand; his Air is wholly unimpassioned, but by no means without charm. No. 4 is an unaccompanied Quartett, "O tarry thou," a feature that is certain of good effect in an extensive work. This is likely to be sung apart from the oratorio and to please when sung. The narration is resumed in the Recitative "And Abraham rose up early." A Chorus, No. 6, "They that wait upon the Lord," is comprehensive in form; its earlier portion is introductory to a fugue, "For in the Lord Jehovah," which is wrought with skill, but presents the subject somewhat too rarely after the successive entry of the four parts. The Recitative "On the third day" continues the story, including Abraham's injunction to the attendants to remain behind, while he with the boy goes afar off to worship; and this leads to a Chorale (so called) "The Lord shall preserve thee," respecting which there is something to say as to its misnomer and as to its merit. So far as we know, the term Choral defines the choral song of the Lutheran Church, and is applied to any of the fine old tunes, dating many of them from the days of the great Reformer, and some of them being supposed to be of his composition, that are taught to children throughout North Germany, and sung by them in after years on all occasions of public worship, each melody being inseparably associated with its own poem. Pursuant of the practice of Bach, as this was pursuant of the use the elder contrapuntists, Mendelssohn introduced several Chorals in his oratorio of St. Paul, and was secure, in so doing, of enlisting the sympathy of his entire German audience, who knew the tunes by heart, and would perceive the application of the words habitually sung to them to the situations they were meant to illustrate. When the work was first given in England, the tunes and the word "Choral" that defines them were alike unknown to us; nothing could give the irresistible charm of familiarity to the tunes and the words; but it was hoped to obtain the true pronouncing of the definition by adding an E to the end of it, thus making Chorale, to prevent its being confounded with the English adjective, synonymous with many-voiced "choral." The good intention miscarried, as has many another, and our people at large mistook the final E for an extra syllable, and pronounced the word Chora-le, sounding the last two syllables the same as in Charlie. By a different process from that which commands popularity for them in Germany, the Chorals in St. Paul have gained favour almost infinite in England; and in consequence, it has become a fashion for our composers to include hymn-tunes in their large compositions, but they compose new music to words that often have been set before, and the tunes not being old and dissociable from the words, and not being susceptible of peculiar interest from difference of contrapuntal treatment from what they have elsewhere received, these musicians still call their original pieces Chora-les, and seriously perplex the judgment of those who are not behind the curtain of their design. Of such is the Chorale of Dr. Bridge. It is not Lutheran, it is not old, it is not boundlessly familiar to any class of people, it is not even set to metrical words, and it is not a great many other things; but it is a good new hymn tune, which needs but an appropriate poem in metre to render it capable of great popularity. We are in no humour to find fault in a thing which really pleases us; but candour compels the admission that one or two accented passing notes, in this piece, serve to confuse the harmony; for instance, the G \sharp against the second inversion of the chord of the 7th of F \sharp (page 38, bar 3), which would sound, were it not doubled in two parts, like a dominant major 9th; and this is incompatible with the key of B minor which prevails at the time, and a misty effect is the consequence, that would not be the case were the said G \sharp sounded after instead of against the harmony. The hymn is in eight real parts, each of which is sufficiently melodious, and its effects will be particularly rich. The more to individualise this effect, there is an accompaniment for the organ, which links, by brief interludes, the several strains of the tune. Further, to guard against difficulty from the complexity of the part-writing, there is an arrangement of this piece in an Appendix, wherein the voice-parts are cleverly reduced from eight to four, and thus it is suited to all conditions of choirs. In No. 8, the Narrator continues the story; and then, as if to render the part as gratifying to the singer as it is essential to the plan of the work, she has an Air, "The eyes of the Lord," which is the most attractive of all the solo pieces. It is charmingly melodious and decidedly vocal, its smoothly flowing character is effectively varied by an episode, in which some novel modulations form the main feature—that from the key of D minor to D \flat major, for example; and it will repay a singer's attention. Next, we have the dialogue between Isaac and Abraham set as recitative, which leads to a Duet, "O Lord our God," for the two male voices. The resumed narrative is presently interrupted by a chorus, "He is brought as a lamb," which is cast in the form of a canon for 4 in 2, the two female voices being strictly answered by the two males, until a very few bars before the end, when a free coda gives completeness to the close. We return to the narrative, in the course of which, the Angel, ushered in and accompanied by harps, speaks in his own person. No. 13 is a Chorus, "Unto the godly," which is distinguished by the recurrence of a melody from that at the beginning of the work, together with the repetition of the former words, "Blessed is the man;" but its treatment is here interestingly varied, it being now allotted to the tenor voices, while the rest of the chorus accompany it in detached phrases. Another Recitative for the Narrator introduces an Air for Abraham, "God is the Lord," which begins somewhat wildly, wandering from the key of A \flat into F, and then settles down into a pleasant cantabile of a devout character. Isaac's Recitative, "I said in the cutting off of my days," is impassioned, more so than anything else in the oratorio; and the Air with Quartett, which it introduces, contains some pretty vocal effects and ingenious æsthetic suggestions from the intermixture of the one voice with the other four, which express a different sentiment from his, in different words. No. 18 brings the story to an end with the angelic promise, which is signalized, like the previous solo for the same personage, by the characteristic harp accompaniment. "Thy mercy, O Lord," is the opening of the final Chorus; it begins with broad harmony in which the higher female and male voices, distributed in four parts, are answered by the altos and basses similarly divided. This is introductory to a fugue, "Thy righteousness standeth," wherein the subject is more copiously developed than in the previous specimen of this class of writing, though its style is more free than contrapuntal, and the brilliant modulations towards the end supersede the fugal character for the sake of a showy termination.

Mount Moriah does honour to its author, and will win him the esteem of musicians. If it be sometimes slack in interest, this is an inevitable consequence of the undramatic nature of the book. Exciting situations are wanted to prompt corresponding ideas, and we trust that the inclination of Dr. Bridge may bend in that direction, when he thinks more of the general public than of the Oxford Music School.

Three Settings of the Kyrie Eleison. The Music composed by the Rev. H. R. Holme, B.A.

THE author of these responses has been satisfied to attempt little and succeed in it, which should be a complete satisfaction to one who has good musical feeling and considerable knowledge, but probably small experience in writing. There is an air of novelty about each of the three settings, and the effect will be charming if they are delicately sung.

Offertory Sentences. Set to music by Alfred R. Gaul.

WITH great pleasure we welcome in this a highly meritorious, interesting, and effective series of pieces. The title-page announces them to have been sung at the Church of St. Augustine, Edgbaston, and if, in contradiction to the Rubrick, the Offertory Sentences are to be sung, other churches will do well to follow the Birmingham example, and make frequent use of this expressive and artistic music. A decidedly modern colour distinguishes the whole series, which fits them better for parochial than cathedral use, and exacts nice delicacy rather than rough power for their performance. With deference, we protest against a progression from 9th to 2nd, $\begin{smallmatrix} C^\sharp & B \\ B^\sharp & A \end{smallmatrix}$ between the soprano and tenor, in No. 8, "Do ye not know;" and we do so because this kind of fault—for fault we must esteem it—is coming into frequent commission; and our remark is meant as much for a warning to others, as for a complaint in the present case. On the other hand, we heartily commend the true beauty of the succession of 5ths between the outside parts, in No. 7, "If we have sown," where the bass is C, F, B, and there is a chord of 7ths upon each note; it is not new to state that the succession of 5ths, whether by similar or contrary motion, when they belong to these harmonies, and the roots proceed as in this instance, is not only allowable, but admirable; and we applaud the present addition to previously existing cases of their effective employment. We have not hitherto met with Mr. Gaul as a composer, but what he here places before us proves that it ought not to remain unknown, and we hope that the success of what he here gives to the world may encourage him to further efforts.

"I will always give thanks." Anthem for Festivals. Composed by Robert Jackson.

THERE is spirit and variety in this anthem, and it is for the most part correctly written. A choral movement begins it, to which the marked accent gives great animation. A detached movement in the middle, "My soul shall boast," seems as if the music had been first conceived and the words afterwards added, for in the very first phrase the text is contracted, which is given complete when the words are repeated. Well, it matters little by what process a composer works, so that his music is interesting; and this must be granted of the piece before us—albeit, it would be better for the amendment of the false relation between the D for the treble and the D flat for the tenor, page 7, score 1, bar 3. After this verse or quartett, the full choir is again called into request for the conclusion, and a capital effect is made by the occasional independence of the voice-parts from that for the organ. The author is a disciple of the Royal Academy of Music, and he does credit to the training he has received.

"How lovely are Thy habitations" (84th Psalm). Anthem composed by Charles Salaman.

THE music before us was probably set to the Psalm in Hebrew, and the English version adapted to it afterwards; at least so, and only so, can we account for the use of words that differ from the text of our Bible and of our Prayer Book too, and are not better in any respect than either of the accepted translations. It seems intended to be sung by female rather than boys' voices, which we gather from the use of the terms "soprano" and "contralto," and from the freedom and frequency with which the high A is assigned to the former of these. The manner in which this and other high notes are attacked is not the one thing in the work that best shows the author's skill in vocal writing. The frequent closing of phrases on the middle, instead of the beginning of a bar, is the one other point in the composition against which we must offer a protest. On the other hand, a charmingly melodious flow distinguishes the piece, and this is enriched by a graceful choice of harmony. The anthem begins with a tenor solo. The same music, arranged as a duet for soprano and contralto, is repeated as a kind of second verse, to the words beginning, "Yea, the sparrow finds a dwelling." Then follows a quartett, "How happy are they," for which a tenor and bass are required in addition to the two ladies, and this sets out with the opening idea that has a new prolongation. At the close of the quartett, the choral voices first enter, "For one day in Thy courts," and hence to the end the matter is entirely new. The smoothness of the solo portions is here replaced by vigour and animation, and the anthem closes most spiritedly. As a whole, the music appears to be more appropriate for chamber than for church use, and in that situation we think its effect will be most attractive. An adaptation of the work is announced, for an eight-part choir, with an obligato organ accompaniment, by Dr. C. G. Verrinder, than whom no one is better qualified to make such an arrangement.

"Praised be the Lord." An Anthem for Four Voices. Composed by William Hope.

THIS composition merits the warmest eulogy, which we offer with infinite pleasure. It is clear in design, pure in harmony, constantly melodious, and unflinching in interest. A choral movement begins the anthem, in which the measure is varied from three to four in a bar. It has an organ prelude of several bars, which precludes the improvisation that players are prone to prefix to the anthems of the old masters, and secures that the whole shall be one-thoughted, the introduction leading to the vocal entry, and greatly enhancing its effect. Then there is a solo—a song, in fact, that might be sung separately from the rest—which effectively contrasts the foregoing. Lastly, there is a movement for all the voices in hushed harmony, "O Lord, save Thy people," which is the most charming portion of this charming work. It beautifully expresses a spirit of gentle supplication, and should inspire the listener with the meekest feeling of piety. We confidently recommend the anthem for church use, in the belief that its careful performance will improve the nicety and refinement of a choir, and will edify a congregation.

"My God, my God, look upon me." Anthem composed by August Moosmair.

THIS is a clever, if not irresistibly attractive work, showing the hand of a partially studied, but not an imaginative musician. The opening movement is for chorus, and is obviously intended to be pathetic. A song for a treble follows, "O my God, I cry in the day time," which is the most successful portion of the whole. A few interludial bars, "But Thou continuest," lead from this to the final chorus, "O Thou worship of Israel," which is in fugal form, but in the style of one who is not sufficient master of counterpoint to grapple with this difficult form effectively. If, as we surmise, the anthem has been written for love, the same love will impel the composer to write very much more, and this practice may give him the freedom of thought which we feel to be wanting in his present essay.

Amelia. Allegretto Grazioso à la Valse, pour Piano, par Wilhelm Schulthes.

If the lady who gives the title to this little sketch be not an ideal personage created by the composer, she has every right to be gratified by Herr Schulthes's musical offering. The absence of pretence throughout the piece is one of its greatest recommendations; for all whose duty or pleasure it is to linger over modern compositions must know that too many writers, having but small faith in their melodious powers, are apt, even in trifles with the mildest possible titles, to entangle themselves in a perfect labyrinth of keys for the mere purpose of showing how they can get out of them, and to exhibit their contrapuntal and harmonic knowledge in passages where such display becomes positively absurd. The subject of the graceful piece before us is extremely attractive, and a good contrast is gained by the second theme, in the subdominant, which is first played with an accompaniment above the melody, and afterwards an octave higher with an arpeggio bass. For the cultivation of a refined touch this Waltz—for the composer is not ashamed so to call it—will be found highly useful.

May-day. Tarantelle for the Pianoforte. Composed by Charles Joseph Frost.

Those who know Mr. Frost's compositions need scarcely be told that the piece before us evidences the skill of a trained musician throughout; but the themes, although lively, do not appear spontaneous enough to make us believe that the talent of the composer has been especially directed to this class of music. Vivacious triplets in a minor key, with a modulation into the tonic major, will always make a tolerably good Tarantella; but the power of inventing subjects which, like those in the ballet music of Auber and Rossini, seem to flow naturally, instead of being built up, is given but to few. We do not like the passing D on the chord of E minor leading to the harmony of C major, in the principal theme, nor the chromatic G sharp immediately preceding the close in E minor, in the 14th bar; but with these exceptions, the Tarantella is smooth enough, both in the melody and harmony. There are some characteristic bits where the key changes to C major, and there is much spirit in the close of the piece, which we may here mention ends in the tonic major. Pianists with agile fingers will find in Mr. Frost's Tarantella both good practice and good music.

There is an hour, a pensive hour. Four-part Song. Poetry by Mrs. Hemans.

Fair is the Swan. Four-part Song. Composed by Charles Salaman.

MR. SALAMAN is one of the few composers who seem to write rather for the art than the market, and we are always ready, therefore, to accord him a hearty welcome. The multiplication of his vocal compositions seems, however, to prove that he is gradually gaining the ear of the public, for we can neither hope nor believe that he will continue a patient martyr in the cause. No. 1 of the two Part-songs under notice is dedicated to Henry Leslie, a compliment which we trust may be responded to by such a rendering of the composition before a public audience as we know can always be depended upon by the excellent choir under his direction. The subject is extremely melodious, and has the additional merit of admirably expressing the words throughout. The voices flow mostly together in simple but appropriate harmony, and the parts are so carefully written as to give but little trouble to the vocalists. As we presume the tenors and basses are to sing the A's as dotted quavers followed by semiquavers, in the first bar of page 2, the passage should be immediately altered, as we think the effect would be bad if executed as it is printed. "Fair is the Swan" is more ambitious in the contrapuntal writing, and contains many excellent points. The composition is scored for alto, tenor and two basses, and has been already sung by the "Orpheus Glee Union." We do not very much like the constant repetition of the name Isabel, at the conclusion of each verse, especially as the voices so often answer each other: there is indeed some unexplainable confusion in the third and fourth bars of page 9, for the tenor says, "But fonder is my I of Isabel;" this should be remedied, for the song is too good to be trifled with.

Spring. Four-part Song. Words by Francis James Calthrop.

Autumn. Four-part Song. Words by F. P. A.

Composed by P. H. Diemer.

POETS appear never to tire of writing about the seasons, and composers never to be weary of setting their verses; but whether anything novel can be said upon them, either in poetry or music, appears somewhat doubtful. All that we can hope for, therefore, is that old ideas may be arranged in sufficiently new forms to pass with the general public for modern works; and, viewed in this light, we see no reason why the Part-songs before us should not take a place amongst the mass of Spring and Autumn music to be found in the répertoire of every Choral Society in the kingdom. No. 1 has a bright and genial melody, well suited to the words, and the voice-parts are written throughout with the skill of an accomplished musician. The conventional character of the verses can scarcely be expected to favour inspiration in the composer; but the music is at least refined and graceful. "Autumn" has somewhat more character. The theme, in E minor, commencing unharmonised, well expresses the verses, which lend themselves better to a musical setting than those in the song just noticed. A very good effect is gained by changing the melody into the tonic major, on the words "The scarlet berries brightly gleam;" and there are some excellent points of imitation. We also like the sequence of seven-sixes, which are given first to the Soprano, Alto and Tenor, and afterwards to the Alto, Tenor and Bass. Without much claim to originality, this song may be confidently recommended as an exceedingly effective composition, and one thoroughly within the grasp of amateur part-singers.

C. JEFFERYS.

Gems of Sacred Art. Nos. 4, 5 and 6. Transcribed for the Pianoforte by Louis Dupuis.

THE exquisite illustrations in colours on the front page of these pieces should alone secure for them an extensive sale. It is not often that we have to speak in praise of what may be called "Picture Music," but these beautiful views of Cathedral interiors, independently of their value as faithful records of the places they represent, form most appropriate introductions to the "Gems" so ably transcribed by M. Dupuis. No. 4, Munich Cathedral, contains subjects from Spohr's "Last Judgment;" No. 5, Freiburg Cathedral, selections from Travers's "Ascribe unto the Lord;" and No. 6, Rheims Cathedral, R. A. Smith's Anthem, "How beautiful upon the mountains." All these form effective pieces for young players, and may be recommended as good exercises for the practice of the legato style.

L'Ombre. Fantaisie Brillante, pour Piano, par J. Leybach.

ALTHOUGH it is easy enough to string a number of airs together without any attempt at form or method, it is a task of some difficulty to write an effective operatic Fantasia. The arranger of the piece before us has already established so good a name for this class of composition that he rarely disappoints us; but in this Fantasia, from Flotow's tuneful Opera, he has been more than usually successful. The themes are well chosen and well treated, and to amateurs who want a pleasing "drawing-room piece," this brilliant little composition will be most welcome.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

MUSICAL SETTINGS OF THE TE DEUM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—You frequently commend musical writers for the strict adaptation of music to words, and also for reflecting the sense of some passages on the text of others by a repetition of the same music; permit me to draw the attention of your readers to certain points which are almost invariably disregarded by those who compose music for the "Te Deum."

That song consists of three parts. The first praises God as revealed in the Holy Trinity, and is really a Creed. It consists of thirteen verses. The second part, which begins at v. 14, "Thou art the King of Glory," &c., is a "hymn to Christ as God," commemorating His Incarnation, Sacrifice, and Ascension. It consists of five verses. The third part commences at v. 19, declaring our belief in Christ's Second Advent, and is a prayer for help and salvation. The last verse is personal, and is generally believed to have been added to what was the original form of the "Te Deum." For further and fuller information let me refer the reader to Blunt's Annotated Prayer Book, page 12.

Whilst I write of this, may I also point out some very common errors in expression and pronunciation connected with the musical rendering of the "Te Deum." Very frequently it is sung to a double chant, which is a most absurd proceeding, for verses 11, 12 and 13, which refer to the Persons of the Holy Trinity, manifestly require an equal treatment. And usually a minor chant is introduced at v. 16, continuing to the end of v. 23, when a return is made to the major. These changes are utterly destructive of the true meaning of the hymn. It is inconsistent to pronounce the "ch" soft in Cherubim, and hard in such words as Chaldæa, Carmel, Canaan, &c., for the "ch" in each case stands for the same Hebrew letter, which is always hard. Angels are said to "cry aloud," hence, the "Holy, Holy, Holy" should be ff, and not pp. Sabaoth has the accent on the penultima, not, as it is commonly pronounced, on the antepenultima. From Spenser's time downwards this word has been continually confounded with Sabbath, but with which it has no connection whatever. Sabbath means "Rest"; Sabaoth (really Tsebâôth) means "Armies" or "Hosts." In verses 7, 8 and 9 the words "praise Thee" should not be louder than the verses of which they form part, for they are not more emphatic. Verse 19, "We believe," &c., should be slow and solemn as the meaning of the words requires. In the Eastern church, I have been told that it is customary for worshippers to prostrate themselves at these words.

Is it too much to hope that those who compose music for the "Te Deum" and for the various other parts of the Services of the Church, will one day first make themselves acquainted with the meaning of the words? Without that knowledge, the hymns and canticles are mere sound: with it, they become instinct with life and reality.

I am, Sir,

Yours faithfully,

W. J. LÖWENBERG.

CONSECUTIVE SEVENTHS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Allow me, as a musician, to thank you for your repeated protests against consecutive sevenths, which, as a rule, are no doubt very offensive. But may I at the same time suggest that a hard and fast rule cannot be laid down in the case of sevenths any more than in the case of fifths; which few composers now refuse to write when the effect is good. I am not prepared to support my opinion at a moment's notice, by quotations from the musical classics (though I think it would not be difficult to do this), but will content myself with asking if the subjoined progression can offend any one—

Please to observe (1) that the harmony is only in three parts, (2) that the progression objected to is between extreme parts, and (3) that we have an undeniable false relation into the bargain.

I am, Sir, &c.,

CLEVELAND WIGAN.

Dover, Oct. 2nd, 1874.

[The writer asks if his quoted progression "can offend any one?" To this, there can be but one undoubting and unwavering answer; it would be a task hard enough for Psyche or for Graciosa to find a succession of notes more excessively ugly. The courtesy of the querist compels the utmost respect for his proposition, but it may not command acquiescence in the same. As he states, there are the two sevenths $\begin{smallmatrix} C\sharp \\ D\sharp \end{smallmatrix} C$, and the very offensive false relation between the C of the first chord and the $C\sharp$ of the second, either of which alone would be sufficiently disagreeable to careful ears, but the two together are as near as possible to intolerable. Possibly the progression is to be found in music of the best masters; but this only proves that they wrote, not that they could have defended it. With such musicians, the beauties that surround an occasional lapse, so dazzle the ear as to render it insensitive to faults which would be most conspicuous in the productions of little minds, where the fault is the only striking incident in a phrase. The study of the great masters is the best road to artistry, but we must study them with a discretion as to what to adopt and what to avoid. Not one of us is immaculate, not even the greatest; and the occasional slips of those we most revere should not encourage us in careless writing, but render us more and more scrupulously self-critical, we, who have no hope to attain to the merit we admire in others, and know that therefore even their errors would be many times more glaring in music of our own.—Ed. M. T.]

DR. STAINER'S EVENING SERVICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

DEAR SIR,—I trust you will pardon my troubling you, but (if not too insignificant), I should like to have this question answered:

In your review of Dr. Stainer's "Short Festival Setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis," you mention a progression as "proceeding from 9th to 2nd, $\begin{smallmatrix} C\sharp \\ B\sharp \end{smallmatrix} A$," is it not really a progression of consecutive ninths? By replying in your Answers to Correspondents you will greatly oblige A.M.

[The first of the two chords is the seventh of $C\sharp$, the seventh being the bass note; the second of the two chords is a seventh of B, the seventh again being the bass note. It would have been more correct to describe the progression as being in consecutive seconds, and an apology is here offered for the oversight.—THE WRITER OF THE REVIEW.]

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

ADELAIDE.—The Philharmonic Society recently gave a performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah in the Town Hall, before a crowded audience. The orchestra and choir amounted to nearly 100. Mr. W. R. Pybus presided at the piano, and Mr. E. S. Hall at the harmonium. Mr. E. Spiller conducted, and Mr. J. Hall led the band. The Oratorio was very creditably rendered, the choruses "Yet doth the Lord," "Baal, we cry to thee," "Thanks be to God," and "Behold, God the Lord passed by," being particularly worthy of mention. Mr. Rogers sang the music of the Prophet very fairly, and Mr. Gowenlock was the tenor. Mr. Coombs, Mrs. Harris, Mrs. Smart, and Miss Nimmo also took prominent parts, and the unaccompanied trio "Lift thine eyes" was very well sung by the Misses Tilney, Gillies and Henson.

BRADFORD.—A ballad concert was given in St. George's Hall on the 19th ult. Great disappointment was felt at the absence of Mr. Sims Reeves, but Mr. Edward Lloyd came to the rescue, and did double duty. Mr. Santley also contributed extra songs. The other vocal artists were Madame Thaddeus Wells and Miss Helen D'Alton. The instrumentalists were Miss Bertha Brouil (violin), Mr. H. Nicholson (flute), and Mr. Sidney Naylor (piano). Miss Brouil's violin performances were marked with great delicacy and precision, and a charming rendering of an Elégie, by Ernst, secured her an encore. Mr. Nicholson's flute performances were also loudly applauded, especially a solo, "Rule Britannia," with variations. The hall was well filled.

BOLTON.—The members of the Philharmonic Society rendered Mr. W. H. Birch's Operetta, The Merrie Men of Sherwood Forest, in the Temperance Hall, during the last month. The principal vocalists were Miss Crichton, Mr. N. Dumville, Mr. Henry Taylor, and Mr. Thornton Wood; Mr. Taylor also officiating as conductor. The first part of the programme consisted of two pieces by the instrumentalists, and songs and duets by the principal vocalists. On the whole, the Operetta was well sung, the choruses especially, showing that great care had been given to the rehearsals.

BRIGHTON.—Throughout the week, commencing 27th September, special services were held in St. Michael's Church, in commemoration of its twelfth anniversary; and Sunday, the 4th ult., being "within the octave" of Michaelmas day, the services were of an exceedingly ornate character. The most prominent feature was the presence of a band, conducted, it is believed, by Herr Stern, both string and wind instruments being called into requisition. The ordinary "matins" was sung at half-past 10 o'clock, to the accompaniment of the organ alone. At 11.30, the bell having been tolled for a few seconds, the officiating clergy, including the Rev. Charles Walker, who was the "celebrant" on this occasion, entered the chancel, robed in magnificent vestments of scarlet and gold. The musical portion of the service which followed, consisted of Schubert's Mass in G, with the exception of Mozart's "Ave verum," which was sung after the Consecration prayer. The treble and bass solos in the Mass were well rendered; and at the words of the Creed, "The third day He rose again," a flourish of drums and trumpets added considerably to the effect—appropriate enough in a Catholic church, but striking one as rather singular in a Protestant one. Nearly the whole of the congregation remained during the service, although but few communicated. The church was crowded to excess in the evening. At seven o'clock a procession of chorists, and three acolytes bearing banners, marched round the church singing a hymn. The anthem was a selection from Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, with band accompaniment. Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus" brought the service to a close. The Incumbent (Rev. C. Beaulands) preached both morning and evening. Collections were made in aid of the fund for enlarging the church; that of the morning amounted to £28. Mr. King, Mus.Bac., Oxon (organist and choirmaster of the church) presided at the organ.—At Mr. Kuhe's annual concert, on the 2nd ult., at which Madame Adelina Patti was the principal attraction, Mr. R. Lancelotti, a baritone, of Hull, appeared in the list of vocalists, under the name of Signor Lancelotti. His voice is exceedingly good, possessing all the requirements for oratorio or opera, with a range of unusual dimensions. His singing made a most favourable impression.

BRISTOL.—At the Harvest Thanksgiving Service on Thursday evening the 1st ult. the new organ, built by Messrs. Allen and Co. of Bristol, was opened at St. Andrew's Church, Montpelier. The case is of pitch pine, varnished, with the front and west side of plain metal speaking pipes. It has two manuals (CC to G, 56 notes), and contains—Great organ, open diapason, stopped diapason, dulciana, flute harmonique, principal, fifteenth, and prepared for trumpet. Swell organ: Gamba, lieblich gedact, gemshorn, piccolo and oboe. Pedals (CC to F, 30 notes radiating and concave), bourdon. Couplers, swell to great, great to pedals, swell to pedals, two composition pedals. The instrument has a pure and mellow tone, and combines much sweetness with considerable power. The church was handsomely decorated with flowers and fruit by a few lady members of the congregation. Evensong commenced at 7.30 p.m. with the processional hymn "Rejoice, ye pure in heart." The service was full choral (Tallis). The special Psalms, 104 and 150, were sung to Slatter's Chant in E, Magnificat and Nunc dimittis to Garrett's Hymn in F, Anthem, "O Lord, how manifold are Thy works," Barnby. Evensong in F, "The strain upraise," and the special Harvest hymn were sung to music composed especially for the occasion by the organist. The recessional hymn was "Now thank we all our God." After the service the organist (Mr. Harwood) gave a short recital on the organ, consisting of "Andante" (Guilmant), Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in G, "Marche Romaine" (Gounod), Cujus Animam, from Rossini's Stabat Mater, and Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus," from the Messiah; displaying the qualities and power of the instrument to the best advantage.

BRUSSELS.—A new English Church, named by the late Bishop Wilberforce the Church of the Resurrection, was opened on the 15th ult. with full choral service. The sermon was preached by the Incumbent, the Rev. C. E. Jenkins, the chaplains from all the great towns in Belgium assisting at the ceremony. The church is a handsome Gothic structure, with open roof, chancel, nave, aisles and organ chamber. The organ, by Bevington and Sons, London, is the gift of Miss Jenkins. A richly carved stone pulpit, the brass lectern, and the stained glass memorial windows, are gifts from other members of the congregation.

CANTERBURY.—On Tuesday the 6th ult. two ladies, acting as a deputation from the committee which has brought this scheme to a successful issue, waited upon the Cathedral Organist, and presented him, on behalf of the subscribers, with a very elegant silver card case and tablets, with fifty-five guineas in a handsome Russia leather purse (the special gift of the two ladies engaged in the presentation). The card case (which was from the establishment of Mr. Mason) had the following inscription:—"Presented with a purse of 55 guineas to Mr. W. H. Longhurst, by a few friends, as a tribute to his untiring energy in elevating the musical taste in the city and neighbourhood of Canterbury, 1874." Mr. Longhurst acknowledged to the deputation in grateful terms his thanks and appreciation of the kind present. In the evening the first practice for the winter of the members of his choir was held, when some fifty-five ladies and gentlemen assembled in the Choristers' School-room.

CAPE TOWN, CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—Services were held in St. George's Cathedral on Sunday, the 6th September, on the arrival of the Most Rev. West Jones, D.D., the new Metropolitan of South Africa. The services commenced morning and evening with the Processional Hymn, "The Church's one foundation." The morning Psalms were sung to Nos. 49 and 52 (Monk's Collection, Anglican Chants). For the Te Deum and Benedictus, Tuckerman in F was selected, the verse parts being admirably rendered, and the full parts briskly taken up. The anthem, "Jesu, Word of God Incarnate" (Gounod), was exceedingly well sung by the choir, and afforded gratification alike to the precentor and organist, and to the lovers of church music among the congregation. The Introit was Hymn No. 345. The Kyrie was taken from Best's Chant Service in F, and the Creed from Dykes's Service in the same key, to whose music the rest of the Communion office was sung, the Sanctus and Gloria creating the most marked effect. After the morning service, the Bishop, a keen and critical connoisseur, warmly congratulated Mr. Thomas, the organist, on the manner in which the service had been conducted, and expressed his great pleasure at the singing. It is worthy of notice that the Cathedral choir is composed entirely of amateurs, there not being even foundation scholarships for the boys. At evensong the Psalms were chanted to Nos. 46 and 42, the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis taken to Ebdon in C, and the Anthem from Mendelssohn's St. Paul, "How lovely are the messengers," preceded by the recitative, "And Paul spake," and the duet, "Now we are ambassadors." The recitative was exquisitely sung by Master Brown. The duet was entrusted to Messrs. Bolus and Hughes, who sang it with true artistic feeling. In the chorus the parts were all well sustained.

CARDIFF.—On the 15th ult. Mr. Brinley Richards, under the auspices of the Cardiff Naturalists' Society, delivered a lecture on Welsh and other ancient national music, in the Assembly-room of the Town-hall, to one of the most crowded audiences ever congregated in this room. Mr. Lukis, the Vice-President of the Society, took the chair, and in introducing Mr. Richards and Miss Davies and Miss Evans, who accompanied him to give vocal illustrations to his lecture, adverted to the circumstance that the Society was about to commence its winter season, and owing to their indefatigable secretary, Dr. Taylor, arrangements had been made by which a series of lectures would be delivered during the session. Mr. Richards, in the course of his interesting lecture, gave ample proof of his power to grasp the subject he had undertaken to elucidate, and he was listened to throughout with marked attention. The illustrations were extremely well rendered by the Misses Davies and Evans, who were frequently loudly applauded and, also, on several occasions encored. Mr. Brinley Richards accompanied the vocalists on the piano, and played several pieces of instrumental music, illustrating the character of the music of different countries. Mr. Richards also gave a description of ancient musical instruments, and this portion of his lecture was illustrated by diagrams. A cordial vote of thanks to him and to Miss Davies and Miss Evans was given at the close, the lecture being in every respect a complete success.

CLIFTON.—On Thursday morning the 8th ult., Mr. Kuhe, of Brighton, gave a grand pianoforte recital, at the Victoria Rooms, under the management of Mr. James C. Daniel, Miss Helen D'Alton being the vocalist. The recital was so marked a success, that Mr. Daniel has invited Mr. Kuhe to visit Clifton again during the season. On the evening of the same day Mr. Daniel opened his regular season of Clifton Winter Entertainments with a performance of Mendelssohn's Athalie, the principal artists being Miss Julia Wigan, Miss Dalmaine, and Miss Helen D'Alton. The illustrative verses were read by Mr. Reginald Plumtre (in the place of his father, Mr. C. J. Plumtre, who was prevented from attending through illness); Grand organ, Mr. Owen Williams, and a full chorus, under the direction of Mr. J. W. Lawson. The performance gave great satisfaction to a large audience.

CLIFTON HAMPTON, OXON.—The annual festival of the church of this village, which is dedicated to St. Michael and All Angels, was celebrated in a very hearty manner on Michaelmas day last, the Bishop of Oxford being the preacher. The church was beautifully decorated, and the services, choral throughout, were excellently rendered by the choir of the church. The organist for the day, as on previous occasions, was Mr. Allen, the builder of the organ, and organist of Holy Nativity Church, Knowle, Bristol.

DUBLIN.—Mr. Mapleson's Operatic Company has created an extraordinary success, Madlle. Titiens in all her impersonations—especially in her great part of Semiramide—exciting the most enthusiastic marks of admiration. On the night of her benefit, the crowd insisted upon drawing her carriage to the hotel, amidst much cheering. Madlle. Risarelli, Madlle. Louise Singelli, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Signori Rinaldini and Agnest, and Mr. Bentham have also thoroughly established themselves as favourites with the Irish public, and their return will no doubt be anxiously looked for.

DUNHAM MASSEY, CHESHIRE.—The annual special Harvest Thanksgiving Services were held at St. Mark's Church on the 4th ult., the church being most tastefully adorned with corn, fruit, flowers, &c. The morning sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Allcock, and that in the afternoon by the Rev. G. London, Vicar of St. George's, Altrincham. There was full choral evening service. The Psalms for the day were chanted to Purcell in G, Woodward in C, and Russell in C; the Cantate to J. L. Harris, in E flat; the Deus to Dr. Elvey, in B flat. The Anthem was Sir G. J. Elvey's, "I was glad when they said unto me." The hymns were, "O, worship the King," to Hanover, "Come, ye thankful people, come," and, "We plough the fields and scatter." Tallis's responses, with the Ely confession, were sung with good effect. The singing of Dr. Elvey's anthem by the members of this unpaid village choir was all that could be desired, and reflected the highest credit on the choir-master and organist, Mr. C. T. Bowland, who ably presided at the organ.

DUMFRIES.—Two concerts were given on the 1st and 3rd ult., in the Mechanics' Hall, the artists being Madame Thaddeus Wells, Miss Joyce Maas, Mr. Orlando Christian, and Mr. Henry Nicholson. Madame Wells was highly effective in "Lo, here the gentle lark," flute obligato Mr. Nicholson. Miss Maas delighted her audience by her rendering of the "Lady of the Lea," "Three Fishers," &c., Mr. O. Christian was highly appreciated in "Farewell," and "The Vagabond." Mr. Henry Nicholson in his fantasias on the flute elicited great applause. The concerts were well attended.—A SERVICE of sacred song was given in St. Mary's Church on Sunday evening the 4th ult. The Rev. J. Mackie occupied the pulpit, and the choir, under the direction of Mr. William Kerr, was assisted by Madame Wells, Miss Joyce Maas, Mr. O. Christian, and Mr. H. Nicholson. Psalms were sung by the choir and congregation, and the professional artists gave solos from the Prodigal Son and the Messiah. During the collection the choir and friends sang R. A. Smith's anthem, "The earth is the Lord's." Mr. Nicholson presided at the organ-harmonium.

HALIFAX.—On Thursday evening the 8th ult., the Choral Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's St. Paul. The choruses were executed with a power and unity which have never been so conspicuous as this year. The basses were particularly fine, and it is only due to the chorus of the Dean Clough Society (now incorporated in the Halifax Choral Society) to report the gratification of the committee, and of Mr. Burton the conductor. Miss Dransfield, for many years the valued soloist of the Society, sang the soprano solos in the first part, and Miss Tomlinson in the second part. Miss Emily Empsall gave all the contralto music, and created a most favourable impression in "But the Lord is mindful." Messrs. Carter and Briggs (also local vocalists) were the Witnesses in the duet. The tenor music was taken by Mr. Grayson, of Lichfield Cathedral, and Mr. Thornton Wood sang the bass solos. In the band we must specially note the flute (Mr. Burrows) and violoncello obligato to "Be thou faithful" (by Mr. Priestly).

LEICESTER.—On Thursday evening the 15th ult., a concert in aid of the fund for the erection of a vestry and parish-room for St. John's was given in the Assembly Rooms, and was numerously attended. Solos were given by Miss Lyne, who also took part with Mrs. Hodges, Mr. Ellis, Mr. Gamble, and Rev. C. Baker in several trios, quartets, &c. Mr. Ellis played Mendelssohn's "Capriccioso," and Benedict's "Erin," and the Rev. R. Quarry performed one of Bach's fugues. Messrs. W. H. Nicholson and G. L. Vaughan played a duet for two flutes, on Scotch airs, and the choir sang several part-songs. Mr. Ellis conducted, and the concert generally was highly successful.

LIVERPOOL.—The seventh subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 6th ult.: principal artists, Madame Marie Roze, Mr. Bentham, and Signor Perkin. The instrumental works were highly interesting and admirably played. The Symphony was Spohr's No. 3 in C minor (Op. 78), and the Overtures, Cherubini's Les Abencerrages, Sir Julius Benedict's Minnesinger, and Schubert's Rosamunde. The choruses were a "Song of Destiny" (Schicksalslied), Johannes Brahms and "O the pleasure of the plains" (Arts and Galatea), Handel. The eighth subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society was given on the 20th ult. Principal artists, Madlle. Titiens and Signor Agnesi. The Sinfonia was Mozart's "Jupiter." The Overtures, Sullivan's Ouverture à l'Opéra, Schubert's Rosamunde (repeated by desire from the last concert) and Auber's Haydée, all of which were played with great spirit. The choruses were two from L'Africaine (Meyerbeer), Bishop's, "Now by day's retiring lamp," and H. Hugo Pierson's naval ode, "Ye Mariners of England" (encored). A special word of admiration must be given to Signor Agnesi's singing of "Vieni, la mia vendetta" (Donizetti) and to Madlle. Titiens for her exquisite rendering of Weber's "Glocklein im Thale" (Euryanthe), which was vehemently encored.

LURGAN.—At a Soirée, under the auspices of the Church of Ireland Young Men's Christian Association, held in the Town Hall, on Monday evening the 5th ult., the Rev. Theophilus Campbell in the chair, the proceedings were pleasantly interspersed by the singing of select hymns and anthems by the choir of Lurgan church, in a manner which indicated the highest vocal perfection, and reflected much credit upon the training of Mr. Gosden.

MAIDENHEAD.—At a meeting in the National Schools, on the 19th ult., the choir of St. Luke's Church presented Mr. J. L. Silver, organist and choir-master, on his resignation, with a very elegant Album (in which is to be placed a portrait of each member) in appreciation of his professional ability and kindness of manner to them on all occasions.

NEWCASTLE.—The new organ at St. Anne's Church was opened at the Harvest Thanksgiving Service, on the 29th September. The instrument is built by Mr. F. C. Nicholson, of this town, and the quality of tone is exceedingly fine. Mr. Wm. Wilson, organist of St. Thomas's Church, presided at the organ; and the choir of twenty voices, all volunteers, trained by Mrs. Bromley, sang the vocal parts. Prayers were read by the Vicar, the lessons by the Revs. B. Addison and B. Christopherson; and the sermon was preached by the Rev. T. C. Whitley, Vicar of Bedlington and Canon of Durham.

NEWPORT, SALOP.—On Thursday evening the 15th ult., Mr. Smart, Organist of the parish church, gave his annual concert to a fashionable and appreciative audience, in the Assembly Room, which was filled. The artists engaged were Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Osborne Williams, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Patey. Mr. Charles Ewing presided at the piano. The concert was a great success.

NOTTINGHAM.—The Sacred Harmonic Society, which is rapidly strengthening in power and importance, has issued a circular announcing six performances during the season 1874-5. Elijah, Fridolin, Messiah, Acis and Galatea, St. John the Baptist, and Israel in Egypt are the works promised at the concerts, and judging from the manner in which the pledges contained in the prospectus of the last season were redeemed, there can be no question that the Society has fully earned its title to the public confidence. The first concert takes place on the 3rd inst.

PAISLEY.—On Thursday the 22nd ult., Mr. J. Roy Fraser gave his third annual subscription orchestral and choral concert in the Drill Hall. The solo vocalists were Madame Ida Gillies-Corri, Mrs. Baxter, Mr. James Mure, Mr. H. Corri, and Mr. James Fleming. The first part of the programme consisted of Barnett's Ancient Mariner, the second part being miscellaneous. The soloists gave great satisfaction, and the chorus and orchestra were both efficient.

PARSONSTOWN, KING'S CO., IRELAND.—A Harvest Thanksgiving Service was given at Killecoleman Church, on Tuesday afternoon, the 20th ult., when special choral service was rendered in a creditable manner considering the time given for rehearsals. Tallis's responses (arranged by Barnby) were used. The service commenced (evensong) by singing the hymn, "Come, ye thankful people, come," to the tune St. George's, by Sir G. J. Elvey, Mus. Doc. The Psalms were sung (antiphonally) to chants, by Tallis and Tonus Peregrinus. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis to chants by Crosthwaite, &c. The hymn after 3rd Collect was, "We plough the fields," sung to German melody, and the hymn before sermon, "Praise, O praise our God and King," was sung to tune S. Boniface (Knecht.) The sermon was preached by the Rev. S. A. Shone, LL.D., of Holy Trinity Church, Ryde, Isle of Wight. The Rev. J. A. Davis, M.A., Rector of Killecoleman, intoned the prayers. Miss Davis ably presided at the harmonium, and the choir was augmented by the members of St. Brendan's Church choir, Mrs. Watson, Mr. Arnold (organist) and others. After the sermon the hymns, "Onward, Christian soldiers," "The strain upraise," &c., were heartily joined in by choir and congregation.

SCARBOROUGH.—The numerous admirers of the special performances that have been given at intervals during the season by Dr. Naylor, on the organ at All Saints' Church, will regret that the recital of Tuesday afternoon the 13th ult., was the last of the agreeable series. The selection on that day comprised Mendelssohn's Sonata in C minor; the "Agnus Dei" in Mozart's 1st Mass; an Offertoire by Wely; Handel's Concerto in B flat; an arrangement of the song, "Arm, arm, ye brave" in Judas Maccabæus; an Adagio, by Merkel; and Sebastian Bach's grand Prelude and Fugue in D major. As on former occasions, the performance appeared to give the highest satisfaction to the assembly. The character of the series of recitals may be judged from a brief statement of the pieces that have been played, viz., five of Handel's Organ Concertos, four of Mendelssohn's Organ Sonatas, three of Bach's Organ Preludes and Fugues, his Fugue in D minor, and his Toccata in the same key; besides pieces by Smart, Wesley, Kalkin, Wely, and other eminent writers for the instrument. The admission on each occasion has been free, the collections that have been taken being devoted to the liquidation of the debt on the noble instrument at which Dr. Naylor so ably presides.

SHEFFIELD.—On the 2nd ult. Mr. Charles Harvey gave the first of a series of subscription concerts in the Albert Hall, on which occasion Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Hancock, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Zerbini (accompanist) were the artists. The large and fashionable audience fully appreciated the high class character of the programme, the various items of which were rendered in a manner fully equal to the reputation of the artists engaged. Miss Wynne's true artistic taste and faultless execution called forth repeated plaudits. Mr. Santley was in splendid voice, and gave immense satisfaction, and Miss Hancock was exceedingly well received.—On the 5th ult., the second Promenade Concert, under the direction of Messrs. Suckley and Peck, took place in the Albert Hall. The band of the Grenadier Guards, under the direction of Mr. Dan Godfrey, performed a selection of music, which was received with the highest degree of pleasure. Mr. Roe in his concertina solo, which was undoubtedly the gem of the evening, as well as Mr. McGrath in his solo on the cornet-a-piston, gave great satisfaction. Miss S. Cole, and Mr. W. Coates were the vocalists, and Mr. Suckley was the accompanist.—Mr. CARL ROSA'S Opera company, from the 5th to the 19th ult., at the Theatre Royal, proved an immense source of attraction to the music-loving inhabitants of the town. The chorus and band were good, and the singing of the principals of so excellent a character, as to well deserve the crowded audiences which nightly greeted their exertions. Miss Blanche Cole was received with the greatest enthusiasm.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Mr. Philip Klitz, of Portsmouth, gave his entertainment, entitled Music and Musicians, at the Polytechnic Institution, in connection with the Hartley Institute, on Wednesday the 27th ult., to over 1500 persons. Both overture and solos were warmly encored, and the whole entertainment may fairly be said to have been a complete success.

SOUTH SHIELDS.—The organ built for St. Mary's Church in 1864, and lately considerably enlarged by the builder, Herr Schulze, was re-opened on the 1st ult. The additions to the organ are an entirely new swell of 11 stops, from CC to F, in place of a tenor C swell, of seven stops; a soft 8-foot stop in the choir organ, and a 16-foot and 8-foot reed in the pedal organ. The sound boards, of the swell and additional pedal organ are of novel construction, every pipe having a separate pallet. Besides these additions to the original organ, the wind is now supplied by extra feeders, of great dimensions, placed in the porch, and worked by Joy's patent hydraulic engine. The original blowing apparatus, consisting of a wheel and crank movement, still remains, in case of accident to the hydraulic apparatus. Mr. Rea, the organist of the church, played a selection of sacred music; and in the evening there was full choral service, in which the choir of St. Mary's, South Shields, and St. Andrew's, Newcastle, took part. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Charles Green, Vicar of St. Mark's, Sunderland.

TURNHAM GREEN.—A Harvest Festival was held at Christ Church, on the evening of Thursday the 15th ult. The service was fully choral. Ebdon's Magnificat and Deus in C, Tallis' responses, and the anthem, "O, how amiable," by Barnby, were very satisfactorily rendered by the choir, which was larger than usual. The congregation joined heartily in the hymns, and also in Jackson's Te Deum at the termination of the service. Mr. Musgrave presided most efficiently at the organ. The collections will be divided equally between the church expense fund and the poor.

WATERSIDE, LONDONDERRY.—On Tuesday evening, the 29th September, divine service was held in All Saints' Church, Clooney, to celebrate the ingathering of the harvest of the present year. The church was decorated with cereals, fruits, and flowers. After the second Collect, the organist, Mr. T. Palmer, gave an organ recital, when he played the following selections: Adagio (from a Symphony), Haydn; Grand Offertoire in G, Wely; Andante, T. Palmer. The choir sang the anthem, "O Lord, how manifold are Thy works" (Barnby). The offertory, which amounted to £11 8s. 3d. was devoted to the choir fund.

WINDSOR.—On Saint Michael's Day, a Harvest Thanksgiving Service was held in St. Thomas's Church, Colnbrook. The church was beautifully decorated with corn, flowers and fruit. The service was choral throughout. The anthem was Barnby's, "O Lord, how manifold." The sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Randall, Rector of Newbury and Rural Dean. The offertory, amounting to upwards of seven pounds, was given to a fund for providing a new organ for St. Thomas's Church. On the following evening a Soirée was given in the Boys' School-room, presided over by the Vicar and a number of ladies. A selection of vocal and instrumental music was performed by Mrs. Grimstead, Miss Lucas, Miss Woodman, Mr. Walsh (of Uxbridge), Mr. Rogers (of Reading), with Mr. R. Ratcliff and the Colnbrook Glee Club. The proceeds, upwards of six pounds, were also added to the fund for the new organ.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. G. H. Gregory, Mus. Bac., Oxon., to the Parish Church, Tamworth. —Mr. E. Minshall, to Oaklands Chapel, Shepherd's Bush. —Mr. G. F. Tendall, organist and choir-master to St. Peter's Church, Edinburgh. —Mr. Osborne W. Pinck, organist and choir-master to St. Mary's, Bridgnorth. —Mr. Thomas H. Bunbury, organist and choir-master to St. Anne's, Wandsworth. —Mr. Reece Thomas Heins, to All Saints' Parish Church, Hereford. —Mr. Frank Bates, organist and choir-master to St. Baldred's Episcopal Church, North Berwick. —Mr. Roger Manthorp (organist and choir-master of St. Mary's Church, Colchester) choir-master to St. Mary's Frating, near Colchester. —Mr. J. L. Silver, A.C.O., re-appointed to St. Luke's Church, Maidenhead. —Mr. R. Virgoe Miles, to St. Bartholomew's, Islington.

CHOIR APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. F. R. Lovekin, principal Alto to St. Peter's, Dulwich. —Mr. J. Harris, Alto, to Christ Church, Brondesbury, Willesden Lane. —Mr. G. K. Bird, Tenor, to St. Peter's, East Dulwich.

Mr. Alfred James Gosden writes to us to say that the announcement of his appointment in our September number should have stood thus: "Late organist of Westport Parish Church, to Lurgan Church, Co. Armagh."

THE PSALTER. Pointed and adapted to the Ancient Ecclesiastical Chant; with the Canticles, Proper Psalms, and Creed of S. Athanasius, by

W. T. BEST.

All the chants are arranged in short score, immediately above the words, and may be sung in the usual four-part harmony, exactly as written. Should unison-singing be preferred, the harmonisation is then available as an organ accompaniment. The "Venite" is printed before the Psalms for each day of the month throughout the book, in order to remove all doubt as to the manner of pointing the words to the varying length of the chants, as well as to secure appropriate keys for the succeeding psalms in the morning office. The "Gloria Patri" also appears in its place at the end of every Psalm, pointed as the rhythm of the chant may require.

May be had separately.

SONGS IN THREE-PART HARMONY. For the use of Elementary Choirs and Public Schools. Edited by CHARLES MACLEAN, Mus. Doc., Organist of Eton.

"The arranger of these Songs has shown every desire to meet the requirements of Amateur Vocalists. In the first place, 'the arrangement for a Bass part, with two upper parts interchangeable for male or female voices, offers more pliancy than the usual disposition in four parts,' and, in the second place, 'the two upper parts can be sung in duet, without the Bass vocal parts.' 'The pieces can be sung in trio or in quintet, and by solo voices or by full chorus.'  So carefully considered an arrangement as this will be a boon to many elementary classes; and the fact of the twenty-two songs contained in the collection being all of a popular character will make them additionally attractive to beginners."—Musical Times, Feb. 1, 1874.

From the Musical Standard.

"Dr. Spark produced at the Leeds Musical Festival a striking part-song, entitled 'Martial Music' (Novello, Ewer and Co.). The setting, somewhat long and elaborate in form, displays many ingenious and clever features. A weird phrase in unison, in the key of F minor, commences the piece to the words 'A fresh north-east sweeps o'er the Rhine,' and throughout the song the harmony is broken again and again to introduce this. Another effective point is a bold passage of thirds between the treble and alto, and the tenor and bass in contrary motion; the rugged strength of this is very remarkable. A placid andantino episode in the major contrasts well with the portions which precede and follow it. The clever use of that grand Lutheran chorale 'Ein feste Burg' is also noticeable; massively harmonized it forms a fine conclusion to one of the best part-songs for a large choir we have seen for a long time."

"The piece is well made and effective. The general idea is worked out with skill, and excellent use is made of the chorale 'Ein feste Burg.' Dr. Spark, who conducted his own work, appeared to advantage in 'Martial Music,' and deserved the hearty applause he met with."—Leeds Mercury.

"Versatile and interesting as are the generality of Dr. Spark's compositions, there are few possessing these qualities in a greater degree than the vocal piece, 'Martial Music: Deutschland and freedom evermore.' Set to a translation of the poem by Ferdinand Freiligrath, Dr. Spark has caught not only the poetical, but the patriotic spirit of the words, and has produced a small choral picture that cannot fail to awaken admiration. The introduction of the old German hymn-tune, 'Ein feste Burg,' is not the least happy of the thoughts expressed in music."—Morning Post.

*Orchestral Parts, MS., can be had on hire.*London: Wilkie, Wood and Co., 22, Hanway Street, W.
Novello, Ewer and Co., 1, Berners Street, W.From The Musical Times, February, 1874.

We have here a composition whose difficulties will not exclude it from any choral society even of the most modest pretensions, while they are sufficient to give a zest to its study, and make those engaged in its performance feel that they have something to accomplish. Its merit will stimulate and gratify the interest of an audience, being easily appreciable and fully satisfactory. The choral portions are highly effective, each part in them being so melodious as to be attractive to the singer; and the solo pieces are not only good on the ground of contrast and relief, but will bear extraction for private performance apart from the rest of the work. The severe problem indeed is here solved, of combining practical facility with musical interest; and, as what is easiest of execution is surest of efficient interpretation, an excellent, broad, sonorous and spirited effect may be relied upon from the performance of this Cantata.

A short, characteristic prelude seems to paint the anxiety of the people of Athens as to the fate of those noble heroes who have gone to defend the country against the countless host of invading Persians, which anxiety is dispelled by the joyous words of the outrunner of his fellows in arms, who falls dead in giving them utterance—"The victory is ours!" The people break out in shouts of victory, but are checked by a priest, who admonishes them to offer thanks to heaven, whereupon ensues a movement of placid religious character. A fugal movement succeeds to this, wherein the boastful advance of the foe is described, and its contrapuntal character displays well the power of the voices. The first number closes brilliantly with an amplification of the opening choral movement, "Victory! victory!" No. 2 is a bass Recitative, which tells of the supposed death of Miltiades, and is interrupted by No. 3, a song for Egina, the betrothed of the Athenian leader, lamenting the loss of her beloved. This is a simple and highly expressive Air. In No. 4, the bass announces the approach of the victorious army; and No. 5 is a kind of choral march, bidding welcome to the heroes, a piece whose strongly marked accent and sonorous vocal distribution secure for it an impressive effect. Then we have a Recitative, in which the enraptured Egina recognises her lover's form among the victors, which leads, of course, to a Duet, consisting of the delighted exclamations of the happy reunited pair. A most difficult situation is this for musical rendering; many admirable composers have fallen short in the attempt to paint in notes the ecstasy of faithful hearts that meet in joy after a separation in despairing anguish, and the fact of Beethoven's perfect success in the wondrous piece in G, in Fidelio, but adds to the difficulty of after writers; to set comparison aside, it is high praise to say that the instance before us is far from unsuccessful, and is certain of good effect. The final number is chiefly choral, being interspersed with strains for the three solo voices. It is full of spirit, its generally exultant character being varied by touches of tenderness, and it will leave the hearers with a most favourable last recollection of the work.

Mr. Brion is a young musician of whom nothing so extensive nor so important as this Cantata has yet appeared. Let him take encouragement from his successful accomplishment of an arduous task, and aim again and again at the same high mark with the growing certainty of a still more practised hand.

From The Choir.

The work contains much spirited and effective music. The first movement of marked interest is the short fugue "Boastful and proud;" the aria "Farewell my heart's fond love" is very elegant; "Crowned with glory" is a vigorous chorus well sustained; the duet "Joyful day" has much grace and breadth in it; the finale has well contrasted passages in it, spirited sentences, good dramatic points, and plenty of go in it. "Marathon" will be found useful and effective by Choral Societies wanting short secular works, and we congratulate the composer on the composition of so clever a work.

SECTION I., No. 1, Pianoforte Tutor.

SECTION II.—"Easy."

SECTION III.—"Moderately difficult."

SECTION IV.—"Difficult."

SECTION V.—"Very difficult."*

This Work will consist of a series of Pieces selected from the best Composers, and calculated to guide Students, by gradual steps, from the very beginning to the highest degree of execution, and at the same time to form their taste and style. The Work will be divided into five sections, namely, Elementary, Easy, Moderately Difficult, Difficult, and Very Difficult. Each Piece will be prefaced by a certain number of Exercises written expressly by Mr. HALLÉ for this Publication, and having some bearing upon the difficulties of the Composition which they introduce; and every note will be fingered by him, Section 1, "ELEMENTARY," consisting of Six Numbers; Section 2, "EASY," Twenty Numbers; Section 3, "MODERATELY DIFFICULT," Thirty Numbers; Section 4, "DIFFICULT," Forty Numbers; and Ten Numbers of Section 5, "VERY DIFFICULT," are now ready, and may be ordered through any Music-seller, or direct from FORSYTH BROTHERS. The remaining numbers of Section 5 will be published as speedily as possible.

Each number will be sold at half the marked price, and postage free.

Prospectuses, containing full particulars and mode of publication, may be had of FORSYTH BROTHERS.

* The title "Very Difficult" is not meant to convey the idea that this Section will provide pieces of the extreme difficulty suited to exceptional cases only (this being beyond the scope of a "School"); it is by taxing in a high degree the general Student's intellectual faculties as well as their mechanical powers that the works included will be found "very difficult" to play well.

HARMONIUMS! HARMONIUMS!
W. HATTERSLEY'S
CELEBRATED ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS,

MANUFACTURED ONLY BY
W. HATTERSLEY and Co., 10 and 12, Bow-street, Sheffield.
These Instruments are superior to all other Makers, English or Foreign.

Every Instrument voiced and thoroughly tested before leaving the establishment by Mr. Wm. Hattersley.

These Instruments are manufactured from the very best, well-
seasoned Materials, in double veneered cases, and upon improved principles, and contain all the latest improvements invented by W.
Hattersley, and although the cost of their construction is thereby considerably increased, the fact of their being manufactured for their own retail sale only (and not for the trade), enables them to sell their Harmoniums at the same price as the ordinary and much inferior
Harmoniums sold by other music dealers.

Books of Designs and above 200 testimonials free by post or upon application.

Special attention is called to the DRAWING-ROOM MODELS,
full Organ Tone.

CAUTION.—Being in London, and finding that a number of imitations of my now celebrated SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS are offered to the public as the genuine Instruments, I think it due to the Musical Profession, Amateurs, and the Trade, to make the following statement:—Nine years ago, after much thought and labour, I succeeded in completing the short Grand, adopting the cross-string principle of Steinway, to lessen the size, and making many improvements in the sound-board and action; and it is well known to the musical world of Germany that I was the originator of these Pianos. Since that time additional improvements have been effected, the sale has gradually increased, and at the present time I have more than 250 workmen engaged exclusively on their manufacture. The acknowledged superiority of these Pianofortes to any other description of the same size has caused them to be closely imitated by various makers; and, in one instance, the name "Beethoven Grand," which I originally used as a distinctive trade mark, but have since abandoned, has been adopted; and with unexampled modesty, the public is now invited to accept the copy as the original, and to consider the genuine as spurious. Among the numerous testimonials I have received (including five medals), I may be permitted to mention that His Majesty the King of Saxony, who takes great interest in Art and Manufactures, and is in addition an excellent musician, honoured my manufactory with a visit on February 25th last, and was pleased to express his entire satisfaction. The Depot for my Pianofortes in London is at Mr. FLAVELL'S, 26, North Audley Street, W., where they may be seen in great variety.—ERNST KAPS. Sole Importer.—CHARLES RUSSELL.

VOCAL CLASS BOOK.

"Is a selection of Sacred and Secular Melodies arranged for one, two and three voices. The airs are all of them attractive, and the arrangements for the voices simple and, at the same time, effective. One distinction in it lies in the words to which these airs have been united, which possess much higher literary merit than is generally found in elementary books of the class. We heartily commend this little volume which ought to find a place in every school."—Edinburgh Daily Review.

"To the students of vocal music this little volume cannot fail to be acceptable."—Scotsman.

SCHOOL SONGS.

"Swan and Pentland's School Songs comprise a selection of Secular and Sacred pieces for one, two and three voices. The Songs have been carefully chosen, and the collection seems calculated to satisfy the desires of the most fastidious music masters in our public schools."—Edinburgh Courier.

"The arrangement is all that could be desired. The Songs are well chosen, and there are besides several rounds and catches."—London: Swan and Pentland, 3, Great Marlborough-street, Regent-street, W.

ELEGANT MUSICAL PRESENTS.

2 vols. 4to, price 5s. each Series, Elegantly Bound in Cloth, Gilt Edges, CHILDREN'S SONGS, Sacred and Secular, with Pianoforte Accompaniments.

"We cannot speak too warmly in praise of these collections. The songs, sacred and secular, are of the class which should be learned by heart in every Christian household. Words and music are altogether most admirably suited to what we imagine was the main object in view of the publishers—making home more cheerful and happy by the sweet singing of our little ones."—N. B. Daily Mail.

"Two handsome-looking volumes, will form together or singly a present of no ephemeral value."—Illustrated London News.

"A more acceptable present for musical children cannot be imagined, for the tone of the words throughout is as good as the music is pleasing. The volumes are splendidly got up, the decorations being in the very best taste."—Orchestra.

Swan and Pentland, 3, Great Marlborough-street, W.

In One Volume, Full Music Size, Handsomely Bound, Gilt Edges, price 2rs.

LAYS AND LYRICS OF SCOTLAND. arranged with new Symphonies and Accompaniments for the Pianoforte, by JOHN FULCHER; with a Historical Epitome of Scottish Song, by JAMES BALLANTINE.

"The volume is certainly one of the finest collections of Scottish song ever published, for although there may be some unknown to the general public, all which have obtained popularity are included. . . . The work is elegantly got up, and its value is materially heightened by an appendix of notes, historical, biographical, and critical, relating to the principal songs contained in the volume."—Musical Times.

"Good taste has been exercised in the choice of the songs, and they are arranged by a musician thoroughly impressed with the beauty of Scottish song. Mr. Ballantine's historical epitome opens up some new matter. It is the production of an enthusiast for Scottish song, who has himself made valuable contributions thereto. . . . Appended to the volume are notes of a historical, biographical, and critical kind. Indeed, nothing appears to have been omitted that could help to make the volume complete, and the result is, a collection of Scotch songs which has rarely been equalled."—Scotsman.

HARMONIUM REPOSITORY. A Collection of Sacred, Classical, Scottish, and Popular Melodies, arranged by T. S. GLEADHILL.

"In the choice of the melodies Mr. Gleadhill has shown the taste of a genuine musician. . . . Altogether the Repository will be a great acquisition to the musical library of all players of the harmonium."—Scotsman.

"Mr. Gleadhill possesses the rare knack of transcribing rich effects in a simple yet musician-like manner, so that they are not difficult for ordinary players. The Repository, which forms a very handsome volume, can be warmly recommended."—Herald.

HARMONIUM ALBUM. A Collection of Sacred, Popular, Operatic, and Scottish Melodies. Arranged by T. S. GLEADHILL.

"This volume deserves a hearty welcome from all who take any interest in harmonium music. We can safely say that it is the best book of its class we know. The melodies (in all eighty-eight) are remarkably well selected, having regard both to merit and variety; in fact, they constitute of themselves a little musical library."—Herald.

"The Harmonium Album should be in the hands of all that cultivate that instrument."—N. B. Daily Mail.

THE MUSICAL TIMES, AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

DECEMBER 1, 1874.

ON EDITING.

By G. A. MACFARREN.

THIS is the age of editing. In other times, it was enough for some men to produce and others to admire; but now, a third function with respect to art has come to be established, a third person stands between the artist and those to whom his work is addressed, and the editor so frequently presents himself, that the world begins to consider that his office must be indispensable.

Now there are three orders of editorship.

One takes upon itself the duty of purifying the text of an inaccessible author, and of presenting his works in a form as like to that in which he left them, as documentary and traditional evidence, together with most intelligent conjecture, can enable him to do. The result of his labour is what may be styled a library copy, valuable for reference on all occasions, and an authority on any points that may possibly be disputed. Such an edition as this, of any work of literary or musical art cannot be too highly treasured, and, in the case of true masterpieces, is desirable beyond estimate. Literature has fared better; but the debatable incidents in musical works are many, very many, and the means of deciding them are far beyond the reach of a vast majority of the persons who are interested in them. An editor of this class needs to exercise his discretion, when there is the choice of two authorities of nearly equal value; for instance, there may be the autograph of a work and a printed copy of the first edition of the same. In many cases the reliability of the former is indisputable; but in others, it may often happen that a composer has improved upon his first intentions, either from the experience of performance, from a reconsideration of a phrase, or from any other cause. He will then naturally alter the parts from which his piece is to be sung or played, or he will alter the proof sheets if it is to be printed; but he will rarely run home from a rehearsal or a printing office to correct his original MS. When this happens, of necessity a copy of the first edition is a better guide for the editor, than is even the hand-writing of the composer; at least, so judged the Council of the Handel Society, in opposition to Mendelssohn, when they issued Israel in Egypt under the editorship of the latter, who wished to restore several points from the MS. that had been altered, obviously for improvement's sake, before the oratorio was first printed. Some of these points are so highly interesting that one at least may be cited in support of the Council's decision, and in proof of the superiority of the printed over the written authority. Throughout the Chorus, "And with the blast of Thy nostrils," Handel wrote the often repeated phrase "the waters were gathered" with the word "we-re" in two syllables, having four separate quavers for "wa-ters we-re;" but printed it, as we all know, with two joined quavers for the first syllable, and one quaver each for the other two.

Another order of editorship engages itself with expounding, so to speak, the original, and by the substitution perhaps of one word or one note for another, or by the change of punctuation, to make clear the sense of phrases which has been left doubtful by the author. To this order belong the countless array of Shakspearean commentators, who have amended away at the assumed obscurities of the original text, till, it is probable, the author himself might be unable to recognize some of his passages, and quite unable to understand them in the guise these worthies have given them. The punctuation of music consists in the slurs to indicate the phrasing, which supply the place of the commas, semicolons, and the like, of literature, which are almost as essential to the sense as the very words they divide and congregate. It is in this matter of slurring or phrasing that the works of many musicians, even among the most eminent, are sadly defective. A thoroughly cultivated reader can of course supply for himself the deficiencies of the copy; and, if he give an interesting rendering of the work, we are thankful to him, even though his views of the expression of a phrase perhaps differ from those of the man who wrote it. Such a rendering is scarcely to be improvised, but demands, in most cases so intimate a knowledge of the music, on the part of the player, that it must indeed live again as vividly in his mind as it did in that of the composer. This, and only this, can qualify him to treat a phrase as if it were his own; and it is only under such treatment that any phrase can come forth with a natural air, and an unconstrained expression. A vast proportion of music needs several simultaneous executants, and it is not possible under any doctrine of chances, that all of these can at once extemporise the same reading. It is necessary then, for an efficient performance, that some one person consider what has here been defined as the punctuation of music, and that he correspondingly mark the several parts which are to be played together. Some editors, of the order in present consideration, stretch their duty to its very verge, if not break it by excess of tension; which are they who not only indicate how many notes are to be given in one breath, or in one bow, or without raising the fingers from a keyboard, but mark what notes are to be played loudly and what softly, what are to be detached and what conjoined, and thus give often a meaning to a phrase which is apart from the composer's intention, and is sometimes opposed to the natural tendency of the phrase itself. This kind of thing is admissible in performance, where the personality of the player may give interest to his erratic construction of a composer's meaning; but it should not be perpetuated in print, unless accompanied with a complete description of what was originally written, and of what has been altered from and what added to the author's text. The free-handed and unavowed substitution of words in the editions of Shakspeare that preceded the present generation, has led to the adoption of many of these in general belief as authentic, and it is only readers who make first acquaintance with the text from later editions, the principle of which is to restore the earliest readings, who can receive these unprejudiced by the powerful influence of familiarity with "amended" versions, which prompts the supposition that right is wrong and corruption is purity. So too, in the reprints of the masterpieces in music, it has been so far customary for editors to insert their own marks of piano and forte, and sforzando, and so forth, that when one lights upon a primitive copy, one is astonished to find how much and how little belong to the composer of these expressive directions. What may be styled a practical copy is of great use, of musical works, to players who have not the capabilities to interpret a composer's purpose by the light of their own intelligence, either for want of intimacy with a particular work, or of time to acquire it, when general education may perhaps have prepared them to obtain an insight into its design and details. Respect to convenience renders it often impracticable to define in print exactly what is editorial and what is authoritative; but it is of the highest importance that editions thus ornamented, let us admit it to be, with the annotations of an editor, should be distinguished as such, so that they may not mislead a reader into the supposition that the inserted marks are due to the writer of the piece. Let such as this be styled a school edition, if you will, and let its advantages be fully acknowledged; but let it never be confounded with the library edition before noticed, which there surely ought to exist, of every work whose interest was sufficient to make a knowledge desirable of what the author wrote, even though readers should in some instances prefer to depart therefrom. An edition of the pianoforte works of Beethoven, now in the course of issue in Germany, carries this assumed prerogative of an editor to an extent happily extraordinary, and extraordinary let us hope it may long continue. In this, with most reckless disregard of evidence, the editors and one in particular, assume to have a kind of second sight of the author's meaning, and by the guidance of this preternatural light, they take upon themselves to set aside what Beethoven wrote and printed, and they supersede this in many passages by substitutions of their own, which materially change the character and alter the effect of what common-place folks blindly believe must have been intended by the master—poor common-place folks! who have but the indisputable notes of the original, the general manner of the author, a comprehension of the theoretical and practical state of art in his time, and a reverence for a great man's meaning and his individual way of expressing it, to guide them. They who are responsible for this edition, unscrupulously add octaves or double octaves to passages written in single notes, extend scales from one octave to two, and make other still more serious changes, which, let us do them the kindness to suppose, they imagine to be betterings of what the world received, as perfect prior to the pretence of these gentlemen to prove it to be imperfect. Of a totally different character, is an edition of the pianoforte Sonatas recently issued in England, wherein infinite pains have been spent in purifying the text according to the highest authorities, and impunctuating the phrases as aforesaid, so as to distinguish their meaning to all who read them. The English, or one produced in the same spirit and with the same amount of insight, should of course be the school edition. The German edition must be a curiosity from which reason and feeling will revolt.

Our third order of editorship assumes the right and presumes the capability to add to the works of great musicians in order to fit them for present use. In letters the same was done by John Dryden, by Nahum Tate, and by David Garrick, with regard to the plays of Shakspeare, and a pretty business they made of their changements. Mankind has come to the convictions that the Tempest is best without having a youth that has never seen a maiden; that King Lear is not improved by the omission of the Fool or by the love of Edgar and Cordelia; and that Romeo and Juliet is good enough without the waking of the heroine before her lover's death and a maudlin, dawdling, sentimental piece of whining in consequence between the two. Would that a like conviction with regard to music might break upon us! The manes of an artist who wrote a Tragedy of four hours long, or an Oratorio of five—such as Hamlet or Belshazzar—could scarcely, with justice, rise from his repose to complain of the inevitable curtailment of his work; for now it is impossible, if ever an audience could endure it, to attend to a performance of such great extent. To shorten, where this is unavoidable, is one thing; to colour, to decorate, to misrepresent, or even to dress (when the applied costume is out of the fashion of the age to which the work belongs) is entirely another. Perhaps one of the greatest evils that have ever been done in music, is the reinstrumentation by Mozart of Handel's Messiah; and the evil lies in the fact that the score is written with such consummate artistry as to rival the beauty of the original matter, that it is hence inseparable (save in those pieces in which, from the first, Mozart's additions have been unused), from Handel's groundwork in public performances. Because of its infinite merit, Mozart's orchestration is now indispensable; and, because of its indispensability, any one now regards it as a precedent, and takes licence from its example to invest other works of Handel with "additional accompaniments." Unhappily, or happily, as the case may be, everybody who paints Handel with the vivid colours of the modern orchestra is not Mozart. If he were, and were always at his best, then should we become strangers to the effects intended by the mighty one of Halle, the stern grandeur and the special sweetness of the Saxon giant would have no existence, and the delicious haze of sunset glories that hangs as a kind of veil between the ancient style of music and the modern would hide from view the most salient features of the master's individuality. I plead guilty to this act of treason against the musician's memory in my own poor strivings, which would not be extenuated by a recital of the circumstances that induced me to the act; I but acknowledge that I live in a glass-house, and the stones I may throw will shatter as much my own panes as they may strike against the crystals of others. Now the case of Handel differs from that of every later musician, and, to a great extent, from that of some composers of his own period, in that the unwritten organ part formed a prominent and important feature in the performances over which he himself presided; and that the absence of this designedly conspicuous feature, causes a vast blank, which imperatively needs to be filled. It was this imperative need which caused Mozart to write his wind instruments and occasionally to add to the string parts of Handel, for the performance of the Messiah in Vienna, in a hall that had no organ. He must be a man with the genius of Mozart or of Handel himself, or else with the belief that he had it, who would now-a-days dare to improvise an organ part to any work by Handel, that should aim at the contrapuntal character and the general fulness of interest of what Handel is recorded to have played; but a thing may be accomplished in the stillness of contemplation, which is impossible in the heat of excitement, and thus one—who could by no means extemporise it—might write, in a fortunate humour, such an organ part as even Handel might not have rejected. This would not be to modernise a work written in the spirit of another age, but to fill up the gap occasioned by the author's incomplete mode of writing. So deemed Mendelssohn—more wisely than when he recast Acis and Galatea—when afterwards he wrote his truly Handelian organ part for Israel in Egypt. It is seemingly inconsistent, on the other hand, to fill up the incompleteness of Handel with instrumental effects such as he never could have conceived, even though it be done after the example of Mozart's Messiah. Let us pass on, however, to a master who lived two generations after the grand old Colossus became silent, after the modern had been introduced into music by the magical touch of Mozart, and who is duly accredited with a mastery over the materials wherewith he worked, that is equal to the measureless greatness of his thoughts. It has been proposed—mercy measure the monstrosity!—to improve the orchestration of the Choral Symphony of Beethoven, and the notion has been justly met by Mr. Manns in a paragraph in the book of his benefit concert last April, and by Mr. Joseph Bennett in an article that appeared in this journal. There is one thing to be urged, and this is the single one, in support of the extravagant proposal—namely, that let be written what may, either in the way of making clear the ideas which Beethoven is now declared to have been unable to express, or else in making clear what the proposer would like him to have expressed, let be written what may, the world has always the freedom to receive or to reject it, and we who have full faith in Beethoven, so may still play him as he wrote, and may still believe that his writing is the immortal portion of himself. The orchestration of a master is as entirely individual to him as are his harmonies or his melodies. One can tell at a hearing that this or that is a score of Mendelssohn or of Schumann, of Spohr or of Weber, of Beethoven or of Mozart, quite as certainly as one can recognise a painter by his colouring or a poet by his idiom. Would a passage by Shakspeare be any longer his, were every word in it that is unusual in our times to be replaced by the last new University slang phrase which has been adopted by the Girl of the Period? Would a picture by Reynolds be any longer his, were it to be recoloured by even the ablest of living artists? Let it be granted that some of the orchestral effects of our master are not satisfactory to the full, and let it be presumed that this is a possible consequence of his infirmity, which he might have altered had he heard these effects as we hear them. What then? If Beethoven had not possessed that miraculous inner sense of sound through which he perceived the beautiful, he would not have been Beethoven; and, in like manner, had he not possessed that natural as lamentable outer senselessness to the very sounds of his own conceptions, so neither would he have been Beethoven. It is he that is our love, our adoration; and he, disguised by the manipulation of another hand, at the prompting of another brain, is a stranger to musicians, and strange may he be for ever. It is argued that the capabilities of instruments have been extended since our master wrote, and that he would have constructed different passages had the means been at hand for their execution. What then? Had he written something else, he would not have written what he wrote, and we shall better enjoy this legacy of genius if we believe it to be unimprovable, than if we submit it to the hacking mercies of any after-comer. Nay, the then limitation of compass of certain instruments brought particular beauties into some works of Beethoven which would not have been there had pianofortes and flutes and other machines for setting the air in motion been without top or bottom to their scale. Notice in testimony, the many incidents, in the early Sonatas particularly, which, recurring in different keys from those wherein they first are heard, are then modified to bring them within the bounds of the instrument that would have been exceeded had the said incidents been precisely transposed; and new beauties spring from these modifications, beauties that never would have come into being had the copyist instead of the composer been able to transfer the phrases unaltered from one key into another. Let it be granted, a grant beyond the amplitude of all heretofore concessions, that the passages it is proposed to alter are weak, unworthy, even faulty. What then? A true lover may perceive faults in the person, or the mind, or the character of his mistress; but will he love her the less? Will he not love her in spite of, and even because of these imperfections? This order of editorship has received countenance and even support in English print. Alas and welladay! It becomes then a duty to protest against it; but no protest can obliterate a once printed word. It is the winged seed that is borne upon the air from clime to clime and from people to people; there is only to wish, where hope has no anchor, that the seed may fall on flinty soil, and that men's hearts will afford no nurture to the art-impiety. May such never become the concert edition of musical classics.

The responsibility of a musical editor is beyond calculation. We owe an infinite debt of gratitude to anyone who accepts this responsibility with implicit faith in his author; we owe as deep a debt of resentment to one who grasps it with an unshakable belief in himself.

NEW MUSIC.

BY HENRY C. LUNN.

IN a recent number of this journal I wrote a little sketch called "Old Music," the idea of which was, as may be remembered, suggested by the fact of a friend, in ransacking the contents of a cupboard which had not been disturbed for many years, discovering a parcel of soiled and torn compositions of ancient date which, had I not been present, would have been sent, as waste paper, to the butter-shop. I could not help thinking the other morning how strangely the incident appeared to present itself as a violent contrast when, by mere accident I lighted upon a quantity of "New Music," although, as might be anticipated, not precisely under the same circumstances. The scene was a country house, in the drawing-room of which I was, by my own desire, left for an hour or two undisturbed. On looking at the various articles, both for use and ornament, in the room, some of which appeared extremely valuable, I could not but remark how studiously old material and old workmanship had been sought, in preference to new. Here was a grand and massive oak cabinet, the carving on which carried us back to the days when lasting worth, instead of showy flimsiness, ruled the market, and the value of an article needed no attestation to ensure a sale. On the mantelpiece was a beautifully designed old clock, which had evidently been handed down from generation to generation, and was looked upon as a tried and valued friend of the family. The chandelier, which hung from the ceiling, was of cut glass, but so elaborately and delicately executed as to show that it came from the hands of no modern workmen. The books of classical authors, in luxurious editions, too, were lying upon the table, as if tempting you to devour their contents. Then the beautiful old English ornaments, which were scattered about, almost made me believe that, in my dream, I had strayed into a castle of bygone years, and that the Baron, surrounded by his retainers, would shortly enter and welcome me with a flagon of his choicest wine. Reasoning from the facts around me, I should certainly have been led to imagine that everything would have been selected in accordance with the feeling which had dictated the choice of the several articles I have enumerated. Strangely enough, however, on opening a portfolio of music which was lying upon the pianoforte, instead of being gladdened by the sight of the finest and most venerated specimens of the art, the work of men whose names are revered by all thoughtful musicians, I found a number of the most ephemeral productions of the present day—Waltzes, Polkas ("De Salon," of course), Reveries, Fantasias and songs of the very lightest texture, many of which had title-pages, the elaborate illustrations upon which only made more glaringly prominent the poverty of the compositions of which they formed the frontispiece. Pondering on this strange and heterogeneous collection, there can be little question that, had I followed the bent of my own inclinations, I should immediately have consigned this parcel of "new music" to the very place where the "old music" discovered by the friend beforementioned would undoubtedly have been sent but for my timely interference. Yet the contents of this portfolio were of course prized by the possessor of it as earnestly as the parcel which I rescued was prized by myself; and, by the laws of courtesy, I was therefore bound at least to tolerate the display of a taste with which I had no sympathy. My time being my own, I was resolved to test the value of the music before me. I opened the portfolio and took the first piece that presented itself; but the difficulty of reading the title was almost insurmountable, for not only were the letters most carefully disguised, by being made in the most fantastic shapes, but they were so placed upon the page that I was compelled to twist my head into the most uncomfortable positions in order to decipher a single word. At length I made it out—"Trickling Tears; Fantaisie brillante, pour le Piano-forte, par John Brown." It commenced with a rumbling in E flat, ending with a brilliant cadence on the dominant. Then came a touching melody of eight bars, so feebly accompanied as to leave the listener to imagine that it was an easy piece: not a bit of it; this was only John Brown's art; for after repeating his theme until it threatened to weary the ear, the tears began, not to "trickle," but to run down so fast and furiously that it became doubtful whether the subject would not be drowned altogether. But it was rescued in time, and treated with a tenderness more consonant with its fragile nature—this time in the tonic minor. Then pit-pat came the tears, gently, but at regular intervals,—as if the mourner had the power of crying in 3-4 time—and, changing into the major, the coda entered with a fury which might be pronounced the climax of misery. As, half way through the page, however, I found the direction "a piacere," I took the liberty of acting upon the permission thus kindly accorded, and replaced the piece in the portfolio. Another immediately attracted me: "Cherry Lips," Polka; with a coloured illustration of the "lips," attached to one of the most unmeaning little faces I have ever seen—even in a ball-room. A harmless tune, harmonised with three triads, and a diminished seventh, the last-named chord being treated in a manner which, although displeasing to musical ears, might be considered charming by the owner of the "lips." A short time enabled me to grasp all the beauties of this work, and I turned to a song which, by the many thumb-marks in every page, had evidently been much in request. It was one of the favourite "maternal" school, embellished with the portrait of a pale girl, with ringlets. "I will not hear his name, Mother" was the title: it was published in three keys, and also in an edition with the simple accompaniment "simplified." It began in the minor, and told a tale of grief which might harrow up the feelings of a stranger, but it was evident that the "mother," to whom it was addressed, unfortunately knew all about it before, so that perhaps this might somewhat detract from its effect. Of course as the verses accumulated, the poor girl grew worse, although she assumed a calmness which, it was said "only masked her heart," and at the proper time in came the angelic harps, with arpeggios in the tonic major, the song ending with a chord marked "pppp," which, considering that pp means pianissimo, must certainly indicate that it should not be heard at all. I was about to select another piece when suddenly, and before I could close the portfolio, the door opened and the owner of the art-treasures into which I had been dipping stood before me. "You have been looking over my last new music," she said. I acknowledged the fact. "Isn't it charming?" she enquired. I hesitated: "You will forgive me," I at length said, "if I disagree with you. The music of the old masters, who wrote for the art, and of those modern composers who have formed their style by an earnest study of their works has unfitted me for any enjoyment in such compositions as these." "The music of the old masters!" she said, "why you surely do not wish to send me to sleep." "By no means," I replied: "on the contrary I would awaken those intellectual powers which these pieces have but tended to deaden, and help you to the knowledge of what a noble art you have been for so many years trifling with. Living so secluded a life, you are yet unconscious of the change which has taken place within the last few years in the musical taste of this country, and may be surprised to hear that to be 'classical' is to be 'fashionable.' I will not urge this as a reason for you to reconsider the subject, but ask you to promise that if I send you a parcel of sterling musical works you will give them a fair trial by playing them yourself, requesting those who are competent to play them to you, and by listening intently and earnestly, not for brilliant and unmeaning sensational effects, but for that coherence of design and purity of style which have made those literary productions which I see around me the glory of each succeeding generation." This was a long speech, but it had its effect. The promise was given, and two days after my return to town a packet of music was sent of such gigantic proportions that, as I afterwards heard, the matter became quite the talk of the village. After a delay of three weeks, the result was communicated to me by letter. The attorney's wife thought it "rubbish," and the daughter of the principal surgeon "had never learnt such dry stuff at her school;" but the Governess in the family of the Clergyman was "charmed," and a young German, who was staying in the neighbourhood, went into raptures over every bar. In another fortnight the conversion was complete. A programme exclusively composed of classical music had been made out, and a little Soirée given, at which the most influential persons in the neighbourhood were present. In half an hour three gentlemen and one elderly lady had gone to sleep, and been immediately removed upstairs to cards; but those whose opinion was worth respecting were delighted. A second Soirée decided the matter; for as the few who cared not for the best music were insufficient to form a whist table, they very wisely stayed away. A conclusive victory was never more legitimately gained: in two days after the last concert "Trickling Tears" and its companions had been sent off to the lumber-room; and Bach, Dussek, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and others of lesser note were duly placed in the portfolio which had been for so long in the undisputed possession of mere pretenders. It may be said, even by those most sanguine in the belief of the progress of true art, that the case I have related is an exceptional one; yet I cannot but think that if all English professors were to consider themselves missionaries, as well as teachers, drawing-room music would in a short time be selected, not because it is "new," but because it is "good."

WHEN the work of a great master is presented before an audience in so distorted a state that he who created it would scarcely recognise it, although sensitive listeners may suffer in silence, it is the duty of sensitive critics to speak out. That Liszt has "arranged" Weber's "Polonaise Brillante" for Pianoforte and Orchestra can astonish no one who has seen the altered versions of well-known compositions put forth by "young Germany" side by side with the originals; but that an artist like Mr. Walter Bache should undertake to play it at the Crystal Palace concert, and moreover that Mr. Manns should admit such a piece of desecration into his programme, are facts which we cannot record without regret. We can have no objection to the prophets of the musical future preaching a crusade against the works of those who do not reach their ideal of true art; but if, instead of leaving them to be judged as they are, we are to have them mauled about according to what they think they ought to be, it is time for those whose faith has not been shaken by recent teachings to protest against any interference with a trust which should be held doubly sacred since its natural protectors have long since passed away.

WE are glad to find that the proposal to present a testimonial to Sir Julius Benedict has been warmly responded to, the subscriptions already amounting to £1000. As a mark of respect for the talent and energy of an artist who has resided for so many years amongst us, as well as an earnest of the esteem in which he is personally held, no more graceful tribute could be paid than that of offering to him upon his 70th birthday a gift to which so large a number of the principal professors and amateurs of this country have contributed.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE Saturday concerts at this establishment have been exceedingly attractive during the past month, but there is little novelty to record. The performance of Weber's Clarinet Concerto (No. 2, in E flat) on the 31st October, by Mr. Clinton (successor to the late Mr. Papé) was thoroughly worthy of the music, which is in the highest degree interesting; and at the same concert Brahms's Hungarian Dances, scored by the composer for a full band, were warmly welcomed. On the 7th ult. the orchestral works included the late Hugh Pierson's overture, "Romeo and Juliet," a clever production by a clever man, but one which will not help him to the position his disciples claim for him. Joachim Raff's Symphony, entitled "Lenore," which was given at the sixth concert on the 14th ult., is a work of too much importance to be judged at a single hearing; but we may say that the skill and dramatic power shown throughout the composition are of the highest order; and that as an illustration of Bürger's exciting poem, it is eminently suggestive in every movement. Another success at this concert was the performance of Weber's Polonaise, in E major (arranged by Liszt with orchestral accompaniments), by Mr. Walter Bache, which was finely given and enthusiastically applauded. At the seventh concert, on the 21st ult., Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto, in A, was played for the first time in England, by Mr. Dannreuther, with such a perfect mastery over its enormous mechanical difficulties, and so thorough an appreciation of its composer's intention as to elicit the warmest and most deserved applause. Amongst the vocalists who have appeared we must record the successful début of Madlle. Thekla Fischer, a young German student of the Royal Academy of Music, who displayed a well-trained mezzo-soprano voice of agreeable quality.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CONCERTS.

THE audience assembled on the inauguration night of these concerts, on the 7th ult., was one which appeared to be drawn together not only by the attraction of a well selected programme, but by the desire of lending support to an enterprise unexampled in the history of musical performances in England. Although a "Popular" night, the compositions were chosen to suit every taste, the quality of the band being most successfully tested in Professor Oakeley's "Edinburgh March," and Wagner's overture to "Tannhäuser," Miss Agnes Zimmermann being heard in the Pianoforte part of Beethoven's "Choral Fantasia" (which was finely played), Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Mr. E. Lloyd, Signor Caravoglia, and Mr. Lewis Thomas contributing several songs (amongst which we may mention "Bird of love," excellently sung by Madame Sherrington, and a new ballad, "My summer-time," by Mr. J. Barnby, expressively given by Mr. E. Lloyd, both securing enthusiastic encores), and Messrs. R. Barnby, Montem Smith, G. T. Carter, Horscroft, and Winn singing two English part-songs with a precision and accuracy of intonation which elicited well merited applause. A military band also played some effective selections, and Lefébure-Wely's Offertoire, in C minor, rendered to perfection on the organ by Dr. Stainer, gave ample proof that the claims of this instrument will not be disregarded in the schemes of these concerts. When we say that the fine choir, under the skilful training of Mr. J. Barnby, was thoroughly efficient in the small quantity of choral music contained in the programme it will be seen that the quality of the forces engaged in this musical campaign was effectively displayed at the commencement. Any faithful record of the several items given at the following concerts would be impracticable in the space at our command, and we must therefore content ourselves with mentioning a few of the principal attractions. First we must chronicle the brilliant success of the new soprano, Madlle. Johanna Levier, who completely secured the good opinion of all competent listeners in her first song, "Quel plaisir d'être en voyage," from Boieldieu's "Jean de Paris," and elicited a storm of applause in a song by Mendelssohn and Brahms's "Cradle Song," the exquisite pianissimo in the latter composition proving her thorough command over the minutest shades of tone. Her voice is of the most sympathetic quality, and the encore which was insisted upon for Brahms's song was one of the most spontaneous expressions of public approval we have ever heard. Amongst the singers who have been heard at these concerts we must also name Mr. Whitney, who has thoroughly maintained his reputation as a bass singer, especially in sacred music. Mr. Sims Reeves, too, has appeared both on the "Oratorio" and "Popular" nights, singing as finely as ever, and securing more encores than he cares to accept. The instrumentalists have been of the highest class, Dr. Hans von Bülow, Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Miss Emma Barnett, Mr. Franklin Taylor, and Mr. W. G. Cusins (pianoforte), Madlle. Castellan, M. Sainton, and Madame Norman-Neruda (violin), and Mr. John Cheshire (harp) have already appeared with brilliant success, and many others are promised. The "Wagner" nights, conducted by Mr. Dannreuther, have been highly attractive; but seeing that the works of so many other composers have a place in the programmes, we are of opinion that "Modern German" night would be a more appropriate title for these evenings. On one of the "English" nights Mr. J. F. Barnett's "Lay of the Last Minstrel," was given with much success; and several other compositions by native writers have already received an excellent rendering at these concerts. Mr. J. Barnby has certainly had the "lion's share" of the conducting; but he has had the valuable assistance of Signor Randegger, Mr. Dannreuther, and Mr. J. F. Barnett, Mr. W. H. Thomas ably accompanying some of the vocal music on the pianoforte. In spite of much adverse weather, the attendances have been such as to raise the most sanguine expectations of the result of a speculation which appeals so strongly to the daily increasing body of music lovers in this country.

WE are glad to learn that the Directors of the Royal Albert Hall Concerts have entered into an arrangement with the Metropolitan and District Railway Companies, by which return tickets will be obtainable at any of their stations, including admission to the Concerts, for One Shilling, or to the Reserved Seats in the Balcony for Half-a-Crown. The Directors are evidently determined to afford the public every facility of access to the Concerts, and their efforts will doubtless be fully appreciated.

THE Annual Festival of the London Church Choir Association was held in St. Paul's Cathedral, on Thursday, the 29th October, the vocal strength consisting of fifty-nine metropolitan choirs. The singing of the Processional Hymn—the composition of Mr. J. Blockley, Jun.—was at first somewhat unsteady, but as the number of choristers increased in the choir stalls much more precision was attained. The responses were taken from the collection edited by Mr. J. St. J. B. Joule, of Manchester, and were scarcely of so festive a character as the old ones of Tallis or those in use at York Minster. The two new chants by Mr. C. E. Stephens, to which the Psalms were sung, are excellent, and the utmost justice was done to them by the choir. The rendering of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, in C, composed by Mr. James Shaw, and of the Anthem “It shall come to pass in the last day,” by Dr. G. M. Garrett, was not so satisfactory. The want of careful rehearsal was evident throughout; and in the eight-part harmonies the effect was confused and disproportioned. We cannot but think it questionable taste to alter the intention of a composer by giving to a large number of voices the performance of that which is expressly intended for picked solo voices; and in the case of the Trio and Quartett in the Magnificat, we were sorry to find that the delicate part singing for which our Cathedral choirs are so justly celebrated, and which should have been strictly adhered to, was rendered by such a multitude of voices as to thicken and therefore destroy the effect. The festival service included a Recessional Hymn, set to music by Mr. Gladstone, a Hymn before sermon, composed by Mr. F. Archer, and the “Hallelujah” chorus, all of which were well sung. A short, appropriate and eloquent address was given by the Right Rev. Bishop Claughton. Mr. Hoyte accompanied with much skill and judgment.

DR. HANS VON BÜLOW's two Pianoforte Recitals, which have been given during the past month at St. James's Hall, have attracted large and critical audiences. The programme of the first, devoted exclusively to the works of Beethoven, contained the “Sonata Pathétique,” the Sonata in B flat (Op. 106), and the Thirty-three Variations on a walse by Diabelli. His reading of the “Sonata Pathétique,” although not to our mind, showed, like all his readings, the result of profound study; but on his wonderful interpretation of the two other works there could be but one opinion. At his second Recital, a varied selection was provided, encores being awarded to Schubert's Impromptu (Op. 90, No. 3) and Sir Sterndale Bennett's Toccata in C minor. Schumann's Fantasia (Op. 26) one of Chopin's Nottornos, and Liszt's Valse in A flat created the utmost enthusiasm, and at the conclusion Dr. Bülow was greeted with a storm of applause which must have convinced him of the firm hold he has obtained over the London public.

THE opening of the new organ at the Bow and Bromley Institute took place on the 4th ult., the event being celebrated by a Soirée in the large hall. The fine tone of the instrument—which is built by Messrs. Brindley and Foster, of Sheffield—was displayed to the utmost advantage by Mr. W. T. Best, who pronounced it to most thoroughly fulfil his expectations in every department. Handel's Organ Concerto in F was one of the most interesting items in the programme, and we need scarcely say that it was finely interpreted by Mr. Best, and created a marked impression upon the hearers. Vocal pieces were contributed by Madame Elena Corani and Mr. E. Lloyd; and on the following evening a concert was given, comprising selections from the “Messiah” and “Acis and Galatea.” It is gratifying to find that the organ, which cost £800, is handed over to the Trustees of the Institute entirely unencumbered by debt.

THE ninth series of Chamber concerts, under the title of “Musical Evenings,” commenced on the 18th ult., at St. George's Hall, before an audience thoroughly prepared to appreciate the high character of the programme provided. Schubert's Quartett, in G (Op. 161), for two violins, viola, and violoncello, was excellently rendered by Mr. Henry Holmes, Mr. G. H. Betjeman, Mr. F. Amor, and Signor Pezze, all the salient points of this fine work being revealed with a clearness and precision deserving of the warmest praise. The novelty of the evening was Mr. Walter Macfarren's Sonata, in E, for pianoforte and violoncello, in which the composer was worthily associated with Signor Pezze. The Sonata has already received favourable notice in our reviewing columns, and we need only say that a hearing of it has more than confirmed our estimate of its excessive merits. Written with a masterly knowledge of both instruments, the melodious character of every movement will always gain for it a cordial welcome even with listeners less capable of judging of its purely artistic claims; and we have little doubt that in programmes where the works of our native composers are permitted to have a place, this Sonata will now be often seen. The applause was most enthusiastic after each movement—indeed Mr. Macfarren might fairly have interpreted the marks of approbation into demands for a repetition, more especially of the characteristic Scherzo and Allegretto giocoso, but in wisely declining this request, he ensured that fair and unbroken attention to his work which such absurd deference to popular clamour invariably destroys. The playing of both artists was remarkable, not only for executive facility, but for the most refined taste throughout; and at the conclusion of the performance the composer was warmly greeted and afterwards recalled to the platform again to bow his acknowledgments. Mr. Macfarren also played with much success Mendelssohn's “Seventeen Variations Sérieuses,” Mr. Henry Holmes gave a “Romanza e Toccato,” on the violin (encored), and the concert concluded with Beethoven's Quartett, in C minor (No. 4). The vocalist was Miss Emma Beasley, of the Royal Academy of Music, who displayed a good voice and style in both her songs. The next concert takes place on the 2nd inst.

AT the first meeting of the Musical Association for the Investigation and Discussion of Subjects connected with the Art and Science of Music, which took place on the 2nd ult., at the Beethoven Rooms, an interesting paper was read by Dr. Stone on extending the compass and increasing the tone of stringed instruments. Several specimens of instruments fitted with the elliptical tension bars, invented by Mr. Meeson, were exhibited, and the effect, upon trial, was on the whole satisfactory. The second paper was by Mr. R. H. M. Bosanquet, M.A., on “Temperament, or the Division of the Octave.” The Meetings, which have been continued on Monday evenings, already excite much attention amongst professors and amateurs; and several papers on important subjects in connection with the art have been promised.

THE Brixton Choral Society gave a performance of the Rev. Sir F. A. G. Ouseley's Oratorio, “St. Polycarp,” and Mr. J. F. Barnett's Cantata, “Paradise and the Peri,” on the 16th ult., at the Angell Town Institution. The choruses in the Oratorio severely taxed the powers of the choir, but on the whole they were well sung, and the composer, who, being present, was unanimously called forward, appeared well pleased with the execution of the work. Mr. Barnett conducted his Cantata, which was fairly rendered; but that want of decision which seems to betray insufficient rehearsal was apparent throughout. The solo vocalists were Miss Sophie Ferrari, Madame Poole, Mr. Dudley Thomas, and Mr. Thurley Beale, all of whom acquitted themselves extremely well. Such experienced players as Mr. James Coward, who was at the pianoforte, and Mr. J. G. Boardman, who presided at the organ, should see that their instruments are in tune, for even their excellent performance was marred by an obvious difference in pitch. The Oratorio was conducted by Mr. W. Lemare.

THE concert of Miss Ellen Horne, which took place at St. James's Hall on the 4th ult., deserves favourable mention, not only because the bénéficiaire is a singer of much promise, but because, having already made a good impression before the public, she has been compelled to absent herself for some time from the concert-room on account of serious indisposition. She was warmly welcomed on her re-appearance; and the concert—at which several eminent vocalists and instrumentalists assisted—was in every respect highly successful.

MESSRS. J. BAUCUTT AND W. BLOUNT'S Musical and Literary Entertainments, at the South Norwood Public Hall, every Tuesday, are attracting large audiences. The programme on the 17th ult. was exceedingly good, Miss Lottie Leslie was successful in all her songs, receiving for one an enthusiastic encore, and Mr. F. Laughlin's solos on the pianoforte were highly appreciated. Mr. J. Baucutt was most effective in his selection, and the combined efforts of Messrs. W. Blount and J. Holt in a sketch brought the entertainment to a satisfactory conclusion. The Misses T. Vining, Rose Mortimer, E. Barnett, and Messrs. T. Chitty, A. S. Dobinson, T. Edwards, and Morant, also took part in the performance.

ON Tuesday evening, the 17th ult., the St. James's Institute Choral Class gave an evening concert at the Athenæum, Holloway. The first part consisted of Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's Cantata, "The May Queen." The solo vocalists were Miss Ellen Horne, Miss Annie Meadows, and Messrs. Henry Guy and Jefferys, who acquitted themselves exceedingly well. The choruses were sung with much precision, by the above mentioned Choral Class. The second portion of the programme was miscellaneous, and included a new ballad, composed by the conductor, which was so effectively rendered by Miss Horne as to be redemanded. Mr. T. G. B. Halley conducted with ability, and Mrs. Halley officiated as accompanist.

THE St. George's Glee Union Concert, on the 9th ult., was chiefly noticeable for the excellent singing of the choir, Pinsuti's "In this hour," and Mendelssohn's "Awake! the starry," being rendered with much precision and beauty of intonation. The glees, "Here in cool grot," and "Awake! Æolian lyre," were also included in the programme. Miss Clara Buley sang Rode's air with great effect, and Mr. G. T. Carter, Miss Spear, Mrs. Allen, and Mr. A. Mills were also very successful in all their songs. Miss Ellen Pritchard contributed a pianoforte solo, "Polonaise," Chopin. Mr. Garside conducted.

A CONCERT and operatic entertainment was given at the Institute of the East and West India Docks Company on the 4th ult., under the direction of Madame Liebe Konss. An excellent programme was provided, the encores were frequent, and Mr. Frederick Oakland (pupil of Madame Konss) was very successful. The entertainment concluded with an Operetta by Offenbach, in which Madame Konss and Messrs. Oakland and Baylis were much applauded by a large audience. The solo pianoforte playing and accompaniments of Miss Bent and Mr. Albrecht deserve much praise.

THE amateur members of the West London and Kilburn Musical Society gave a Soirée Musicale d'Invitation at St. Thomas's Hall, on the 16th ult. The programme, which was miscellaneous, was well rendered, especially the glees and choruses by the choir. Mr. S. W. Beavan presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. W. Beavan conducted. A new Christmas Cantata, for full band and chorus, will be performed at Christmas.

A SUCCESSFUL concert was given on the 17th ult., in the Hall of the City of London Middle-Class School, Cowper Street, under the direction of Mr. F. Leslie Jones. The most noticeable numbers of the programme were a descriptive ballad, "Lost at sea," sung by Madame Poole, Donizetti's Cavatina, "L'amor suo mi fè beata," sung by Miss Green, and the trio, "Memory," sung by the two ladies and Mr. Stedman. This gentleman also introduced a new song, "Love's offering," composed for him by Mr. A. J. Dye, and accompanied by the composer, which was encored. The boys of the school sang several part-songs, composed by their instructor, Mr. Jones, which were very effective. Mr. Dean was an able accompanist.

By the death of Miss Maria Hackett the choristers of England, past and present, have lost a friend and patron. During the greater part of her very long life (she died in her 92nd year), she devoted not only her personal energies but also the greater part of her fortune towards the amelioration of the educational condition of cathedral choristers. By consistent entreaty and remonstrance with the authorities all through England, she succeeded in getting a restoration of many privileges for choristers which they might even now have been without but for her kindness. Many a musician of eminence in the profession has reason to be grateful to her for the first lessons in the advanced branches of his art, for she was as quick to observe talent as she was to foster and encourage it by good advice and pecuniary help. For more than 50 years she made an annual visit to the several cities to look after her "dear children," not without the jealous opposition of the authorities at first, but afterwards with every possible encouragement from them. She died at her house at Hackney on Thursday week, grateful and thankful at having been spared to see the fruits of the good seed sown by her. The Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, pleased to mark their high estimate of her many noble qualities of heart and head, have consented to allow a tablet to her memory to be placed in a conspicuous part of the crypt of the Cathedral, which is to be erected by the choristers of England. Dr. Stainer and Mr. W. A. Barrett, Mus. Bac., formerly choristers, and now members of the Cathedral, have undertaken to receive subscriptions for this very worthy object.

REVIEWS.

MACMILLAN AND CO.

Mendelssohn: Letters and Recollections. By Dr. Ferdinand Hiller. Translated, with the consent and revision of the Author, by M. E. von Glehn.

WE can scarcely imagine any person more thoroughly competent to place "Letters and Recollections" of Mendelssohn before the world than Dr. Ferdinand Hiller; for, both as an earnest artist and a sincere friend of the composer, he had frequent opportunities of closely observing not only the constant manifestations of his exceptional musical powers, but the many social qualities which endeared him to all who came within his influence. "The hours," he says, in his Preface, "which I spent with Mendelssohn at the piano, in the interchange of our views on music and compositions of all kinds, our own and other people's, were, in a certain sense, the best which I had the happiness of enjoying with him;" and there can be little doubt that any record of these delightful hours must have the utmost interest for all who love the art to which they were devoted. But we would willingly pass over what follows in the Preface, were we not constrained to believe, on so good an authority, that there must be too much truth in the assertion: "I come forward," says Dr. Hiller, "all the more boldly with these pages, so full of admirable traits of the departed, because he, one of the brightest and most beautiful stars in the firmament of German art, is experiencing in his own country, the attacks of envy, of want of comprehension and judgment, which can only bring dishonour on those from whom they proceed, for they will never succeed in detracting from the glory which surrounds his name." Fully endorsing this feeling, we may say that if the attempt to cast a slur upon the name of so great a genius by a small minority of his countrymen has had the effect of urging Dr. Hiller to publish so charming a book as the one before us, we may be disposed to look upon their futile efforts with at least a gentle spirit of toleration. Our author's description of the early life of Mendelssohn is extremely interesting. He is first introduced to him by Aloys Schmitt, who, according to appointment, came to visit him with all the pride of one who has discovered an art treasure: "Behind him," he says, "was a boy, only a little bigger than myself, who kept leaping up till he contrived to get his hands on to Schmitt's shoulders, so as to hang on his back, and be carried along for a few steps, and then slip off again." As might be expected, this meeting between the youthful artists soon led to a warm attachment; and, some years after, Dr. Hiller relates one of the many proofs which he witnessed of his extraordinary abilities. At one of the practice-meetings of the "Cæcilia" Society, at Frankfort, Mendelssohn being present, was asked to play: "We had been singing choruses from Judas Maccabæus," he says, "He took some of the principal melodies—especially 'See the Conquering Hero'—and began to extemporise on them. I hardly know which was the most wonderful—the skilful counterpoint, the flow and continuity of the thoughts, or the fire, expression and extraordinary execution which characterized his playing." That music was the language in which Mendelssohn gave utterance to his best thoughts may be gathered not only from his letters, but from many incidents related by those who were most intimate with him. In this book, for example, we are told that a letter to his family describing the passage to Staffa, and the inside of the cave—which is dated "Auf einer Hebride, d. 7te August 1829," as if actually written on the island—contains the words "to show how extraordinarily moved I was, the following occurred to me,"—and then come the first ten or twelve bars of the overture in score. Another instance may be cited: "One evening," says Dr. Hiller, "I found Felix deep in the Bible. 'Listen,' he said; and then he read to me, in a gentle and agitated voice, the passage from the First Book of Kings, beginning with the words, 'And behold, the Lord passed by,' 'Would not that be splendid for an Oratorio?' he exclaimed"—and with what sublime effect he afterwards set these words those acquainted with Elijah need scarcely be reminded. It would be impossible with the few quotations we could give from the letters in this volume, to convey the faintest idea of the rich contents of the book. Dr. Hiller is an accomplished literary man, as well as a distinguished musical artist; and the style with which he relates his experiences is exceedingly attractive, apart from the interesting matter upon which he treats. His veneration for his deceased friend is so thoroughly shared in by the world at large that even the minute points of character which he occasionally enlarges upon, will be interesting to the majority of his readers. "How gloriously," he says, "the Greeks would have honoured and praised him, as a chosen favourite of Apollo and the Muses." Let us hope that certain of Mendelssohn's countrymen will take this truth to heart.

J. B. CRAMER AND CO.

Treatise on Counterpoint. Translated and adapted from the German of Ernst Friedrich Richter, by Franklin Taylor.

THIS work, by the Professor at the Conservatorium of Music at Leipzig, will, we hope, cause us to think seriously of the manner in which for so many years Counterpoint has been taught in this country. Bound by the fetters constructed in a past age, we have moved only within the narrow confines of a system which was too carefully guarded to permit of our escaping with impunity; and if we would gain that healthy freedom, therefore, positively essential for those who desire to develop the modern resources of the art, we must not only listen to the earnest teachings of so fearless a reformer as Herr Richter, but do our utmost to spread his doctrines amongst the musical students of our seminaries. "Fux," says our author in his Introduction, "founded his system on the so-called Church Tones (Gregorian Modes) the treatment of which required special rules. That which was suitable and appropriate to his time is so no longer for us." This is true enough; but the worst of it is, that not only did this author in his Gradus ad Parnassum, lay down contrapuntal laws for the guidance of students, who of course had not the slightest idea of our modern tonal system, but he did so with a manner so authoritative, that his principles have remained in force long after many of them became practically useless. The plan, for instance, of commencing with two parts, and advancing gradually to a greater number, was of course a portion of the system which recognised only a progression of intervals, without relation to any harmonic foundation;

but, as Richter says, the ascendancy of Harmony over Counterpoint, which received a decisive impulse from Beethoven, made theorists begin to think a little on their own account; and insensibly almost, contrapuntal writing became coloured with modern feeling, whilst the ancient rules were as rigidly taught as if the Gregorian Modes were still in the ascendant. It has been so long the custom too to class Counterpoint in five orders, that it appears almost strange to imagine that any eminent theorist should dare to violate this time-honoured rule; but it is difficult indeed to give any solid reason for the pursuance of this method, especially when we find that Johann Anton André, in his Lehrbuch der Tonsetzkunst, treats of many others of use at one time in Italy. In the treatise before us, the author clears away at once all obstructions, and considering solely how Counterpoint should be taught in the present day, obeys only those rules of the older writers which seem to embody an eternal truth. The reasons for his first innovation shall be told in his own words: "One important point in which our present plan differs from the older methods is in the choice of the four-part contrapuntal phrase as a starting point, while the earlier exercises on the old system were always in two parts; the justification of this course lies in the fact that the harmonic progression is of much greater importance in modern music than formerly, as giving the foundation for all the melodic progressions, instead of being rather the accidental result of the to a certain extent very mechanical movement of parts." In proof of this ruling influence of the harmony upon the contrapuntal writing, the commencement of the first chorus in Bach's St. Matthew "Passion Music" is quoted, and afterwards the harmonic sequence upon which it is undoubtedly founded is given, the contrast between this beautiful progression and the dry Counterpoint of the older writers being too obvious to be questioned. Acting upon this fact, the exercises in the treatise commence with counterpoint in four parts; and, in accordance, as the author says, with the requirements of modern music, common chords and sevenths, with their inversions, are available, not however, of course, without a strict observance of all rules relating to the preparation and resolution of discords. The next important difference between this book and those which have preceded it is that, instead of five orders of counterpoint, only three are treated of—the first, note against note, the second composed of the original second and fourth orders in combination, and the third with four notes against one. We are not quite sure that we like the plan of merging the second and fourth species into one "order," as we consider it very essential to teach the student to observe an almost unbroken series of syncopations; and, according to Richter's method, he will, by writing in the second order whenever he pleases, use with the utmost freedom a counterpoint which, in the old "fourth species" was merely allowed as a "licence," in order to escape a difficulty. We are also inclined to dissent from the rule that no passing notes be admitted in this species except the seventh; for certainly a good effect is, we think, obtained by passing to a concord through what is known as a "discord of regular transition," both in ancient and modern counterpoint. Slight differences of opinion, however, should not prevent the teachers of the day from seeing what a valuable book is before them; and much may be done by drawing the attention of students to the main principles contained in this treatise, even if all the laws there laid down be not rigidly enforced. We are still in our teachings haunted by traditions which are totally inapplicable to modern art: even our term "Relative minor"—with all the absurdities surrounding it—is but a remnant of a past age; and if we are to continue to use this name because it meant something once, we might as well commence our study of the theory of music by counterpoint in two parts, and proceed gradually to harmony, because this was the method pursued by those who have gone before us. In concluding our notice of Herr Richter's Treatise, we must award much praise to Mr. Franklin Taylor, not only for his excellent translation, but for his description of the "Gregorian Modes," which will be found highly useful to students unacquainted with the subject.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

My spirit was in heaviness. A Sacred Cantata, composed by John Sebastian Bach. The English translation and adaptation by the Rev. John Troutbeck, M.A.

WE have before us the Cantata "Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss," which, we believe, has not hitherto been printed with an English version. It is a great boon to choral societies, and a far greater to musical students, to have this superb work brought within their reach in any form and at any price; but here is an edition in a conveniently portable shape, a specimen of first-rate typography, with a translation that shows the purport of the original verses and thus the deep expression which constitutes a chief element in the beauty of the music, and all for the price of a single shilling. Art must be advanced theoretically and practically by the issue of such a publication, and we give all honour to those concerned. Singing societies are warned, however, that the composition presents difficulties which will tax their best powers; but, for encouragement, let us assure them that the conquest of these will richly repay any pains it may cost. A caution is due also to young students, that the very remarkable music must be examined with careful reservation, and by no means in the idolatrous spirit of accepting as beautiful everything comprised in a work of beauty; the work has many instances (such as the two 5ths between the top and bottom parts page 1, score 3, bar 2) of the unscrupulous use of passing notes that is conspicuous in the writings of the great master, which we receive with wonder, though with respect, from him in his greatness, but which would stand out as glaring deformities in any music of our own, where there is not preponderating beauty to draw the hearer's attention from these progressions, not of 5ths only, but of 7ths and 2nds that are far more distressing in effect, when their effect strikes the attention. It should be a consolation to the striver after excellence, that the highest among artists is still human, and that while it would be vain, if not presumptuous, to emulate the sublimity of his prevalent greatness, even its glory is chequered by occasional specks that may be disregarded, but must not be admired.

The original text of the Cantata is a poem of indifferent merit—Bach was not most fortunate in his literary co-labourers—wherein the vexed spirit complains of its affliction, and this is assuaged by the lips of the Saviour himself, so sweetly, so benignly, so lovingly, that grief gives way to rejoicing, and exultation takes the place of despair.

The opening Symphony is a wonderful piece of Harmony, eminently pathetic in its æsthetic character, and abounding in technical incidents as admirable as they are unfamiliar. It is singularly grand, and presents a mighty grief, such as in men's esteem should be worthy of heavenly interference. In the Chorus "Lord, my God," the sorrow has a more definite utterance in words; this ejaculation seems to be wrung from the agony of the heart, and then, in gentler complaining, the separated voices pour forth by turns and develop at length a melody of great sweetness. Very curiously, this is identical in notes and in key with that of "The flocks shall leave the mountains," which is familiar to us all, and the counterpoint is not entirely different from that in Handel's Trio. There cannot be the remotest supposition that, in those days of difficult communication, either master can have seen the almost coincident (speaking as to time) composition of the other, and the fact before us is thus but one more to the many proofs that the strongest resemblance between two works may not result from plagiarism, but shows rather the simultaneous conception of the same idea in two minds. The isolated words "But, Lord," divide this movement from a Vivace, "but Thy consolations," which contrast the foregoing, and the Chorus concludes with the resumption of the first movement. No. 3 is prominent in beauty among all of excellence that surrounds it. It is an Air for soprano, whose delicate tenderness displays the marvellous capability of music to express the deepest feelings. Point after point in it called forth exclamations of delight, and, speak we of the continuous melody, of the felicitous settings of certain particular expressions, or of the extraordinary harmony, our only word can be admiration. Nos. 4 and 5 are a Recitative and Air for tenor, "Fast my bitter tears." They who are familiar with the music of the Passion, know the rare power of the master in free declamation, and this is here exemplified. The Air is full of feeling and musical charm, but one must own it has some vocal difficulties—such as the juxtaposition of low and high notes without intervening breathing time—that are beyond the right of a composer to impose upon his vocalist; still, there is much in this song to delight the listener, if there is more than can please the singer. The First Part of the Cantata ends with a Chorus, both movements of which are initiated by four solo voices. The first of these, "Why grievest thou?" is declamatory, the words being given in separated phrases, sometimes by a single vocal part and sometimes by the whole choir. The other, "For he is the help," is a fugue on a melodious subject, which is worked with great interest.

The second part opens with a Recitative and Duet for soprano and bass, of which the subject might be repugnant to English readers who regarded it from the point of view of conventional prejudice. The first voice represents the complaining spirit, and the second, the consoling Saviour. This latter, however, never speaks in the recorded words of Jesus, and so offends not by reproducing the personality of the Redeemer, at which our countrymen are apt to be shocked; but, by enunciating Christian views in non-scriptural terms, it seems to personify Christianity rather than to personate the Christ. A paraphrase of the previous sentence always constitutes the response, such as "Yea, I am rejected," and "Nay, Thou art elected," and the musical treatment of this is as ingenious as it is delicate. One passage (page 33), where, for the while, we are in the key of B flat minor, is particularly beautiful, the G flat in the bass being the note on which the beauty culminates. The episodical Allegretto, "Lord Jesus," has the voice-parts in such close imitation that it might pass for a strict canon with the casual hearer who could not collate them phrase by phrase. The Duet needs infinite nicety in performance, but there are effects in it which will compensate the singer's most careful study. The Chorus, No. 9, "Now again be thou joyful," amply refutes the notion that the minor form of a key is needfully mournful; this is in G minor, and it is as vigorous, hearty, and healthful in character as anything we know. The marked repeat of the first three of its four somewhat extensive strains, induces a length which is scarcely compatible with good effect, so it may be desirable to disregard these marks in performance. An interesting point of harmony occurs at page 41, score 1, bars 4 and 5, and its interest lies in its anticipation of one of the wildest freedoms of our latest days; the bass note G (7th in the chord of A) being accompanied by B \sharp and A successively (minor 9th and root of the same), leaps to D (root of the following chord) instead of resolving on F \sharp (its 3rd), as ordinary rule would require—O modern writers, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Sterndale Bennett, how have your most daring innovations been forewritten! No. 10, "Rejoice, O my spirit," is an Air for tenor; it is surprisingly modern in character and ceaselessly melodious. It is not the best piece in the work, but this says so much the more for the merit of the others, and takes nothing from the Air under notice. The final Chorus opens with a majestic movement, "The Lamb that was slain," much in the manner of some of the introductory pieces in Israel in Egypt, and closely akin to them in merit and effect. Then follows a fugue "Praise and honour," which, like some other of the choral pieces, is begun by four solo voices. It has three distinct subjects; one in detached exclamations, one to the word "Hallelujah," and one consisting of florid passages to the word "Amen." It is of an eminently jubilant character, the third subject in particular ringing in joyful response from side to side of the choir, and filling the space with a tone of gladness. The sadness which marks much of the music of Bach is entirely absent here; the variety in the vocal parts is enhanced by further diversity of accent in the accompaniment which animates but never confuses the effect; and the work is thus terminated with infinite spirit.

Let us hope, now that the means are at hand for everybody, to hear of an early production of this all but unknown masterpiece, by executants and before an audience that can both do justice to its prodigious beauty.

Sabbath Recreations. A set of Sacred Songs. The words selected from Holy Scripture. Composed by Charles Joseph Frost. Nos. 1 to 7.

ALTHOUGH unequal in merit, these songs have a devotional feeling which should commend them to all who believe that the mere selection of Scriptural words is not sufficient to stamp a composition as "sacred." No. 1, "I will lay me down in peace," and No. 2, "There the wicked cease from troubling," are calm and musicianlike settings of the text, which may be made effective, if well sung, but scarcely call for any special remark. No. 3, "Heav'n and earth shall pass away," contains some fervent writing, and is excellently harmonised; but the gem of the set is No. 4, "Thy loving kindness and mercy," which has a truly sympathetic melody, and is good enough to prove the "selling" song of an Oratorio, were it to be included in such a work. No. 5, "I cried unto the Lord," has a pathetic phrase, in D minor, to the words of the title, the feeling of the verses being well preserved throughout; and Nos. 6 and 7, "Seek ye the Lord," and "Them that are meek," are also worthy of praise, the latter, especially, having a vocal and appropriate theme, most effectively coloured with the harmony. The accompaniments, as a rule, are somewhat monotonous; but in all the songs they are carefully written, and well support the voice-part.

Martial Music ("Deutschland and Freedom evermore"). For voices only. The words translated from a German poem by Ferdinand Freiligrath. Composed by William Spark.

THIS composition, written expressly for, and performed at, the recent Festival at Leeds, is a bold and effective piece, the composer having successfully availed himself of the varied character of the words to escape a monotony too often observable in patriotic choruses. The Andantino phrase forms a good contrast with the brightness of the more impassioned portions of the work; a good point is gained, too by the passages for all the voices in thirds, and the treatment of the well-worn Lutheran choral, "Ein' feste Burg," deserves much praise. The composition is not of a high class, but it is one of which a musician need not be ashamed.

Isle of Beauty. Part-song. Words by Thomas Haynes Bayley.

Wake, Maid of Lorne. Part-song. Words by Sir Walter Scott.

Composed by Edward Davidson Palmer.

THESE songs are exceedingly simple in construction, but they are well adapted to the words, and generally carefully written for the voices. In No. 1, the melody is not particularly striking, but it is smooth and vocal, some little effect, too, being gained by the passage for tenors and basses in unison, answered by imitative phrases for the other voices. No. 2 has an appropriate theme, with no undue display of harmony; but we do not like the doubled leading-note in the close on the dominant, page 2; surely the chord would have been better as a 6-5 allowing the alto to sing D.

Fair Daffodils. Four-part Song. Poetry by Herrick. Music by Alfred Alexander.

If the many harsh harmonies and false relations in the part-writing contained in this song are jotted down in defiance of criticism, we cannot but wonder that the composition is sent for review. We should certainly call these blemishes mere crudities arising from inexperience, were we not forced to admit that in many places the treatment of the vocal parts shows the result of good training. We cannot stay to analyse, with the view of amending, this part-song; but in justification of our opening remarks, may point to the false relation between the prominent E flat in the soprano and the E natural in the alto—between bars 4 and 5, page 4—and the extraordinary succession of sevenths on the 6th page, which the composer has marked "poco accel.," as if he were glad to get over them as soon as possible.

LIMPUS.

Praise ye the Lord (the 146th Psalm), set to music by Edwin J. Crow, Mus. Bac., Cantab. With an accompaniment for the pianoforte, arranged by the Author.

THIS work may be defined as a Cantata, and was apparently the Author's Exercise for his bachelor's degree, at least, it terminates with the indispensable piece in five real vocal parts, and it contains several specimens of fugal writing, and what further can be requisite in an University Exercise? It comprises a Chorus, a Recitative and Aria for tenor, a Trio for female voices leading into a Chorus, a bass Solo and Chorus, a Duet for soprano and contralto, and a final Chorus. It is correct, in the first choral fugue, to transpose the subject, G B C D, note for note in the answer, D \sharp F G A, which is real and not tonal because the tone between the subdominant and dominant, C D, would have no parallel in the semitone between the leading note and the tonic had D E \sharp F G, been given for the answer. It is incorrect in the second fugue, of which the subject begins on E and closes on B, to make the answer begin on B and end on \sharp F, for the last seven notes should be a second lower than they stand, so as to bring the close upon E. We trouble the reader with thus much of the schoolroom, because the matter of subject and answer has given occasion for some dispute of late, in this journal and elsewhere, and we wish it may be to clear up some of its mystery. There are tokens of inexperience in the composition, not the least of which is the use of high notes for separate syllables in the soprano part, and of such low notes as C for the tenor, which, if sung, could scarcely be heard. We will not enter further into details, but hope that, when he has not the fear of an examining professor before him, the organist of Ripon Cathedral will write with greater ease and proportionate success.

WEEKES AND CO.

The Office of the Holy Communion. Set to music by the Rev. Walter Miller, B.A., Mus. Bac., Oxon.

THIS seems to be one of the many musical compositions of the present day that owe their existence, firstly, to an author's facility in picking out chords on a pianoforte or harmonium; secondly, to his having command of opportunity for performance of what he may write; and thirdly, to the ease and cheapness with which music may now be printed. It is more correctly written generally, than are many works of its class; but the world is less enriched than the vanity of the writer may be gratified by its publication. A remarkable exception from the faultlessness that for the most part prevails, is the two-fold false relation at the words "our hearts," in the response after the tenth Commandment, where the D \sharp of the bass is followed by D \sharp in an inner part, and the F \sharp of the top part is followed by F \sharp in the bass, and the peculiarity of this progression is enhanced by the passage in 5ths of the two top parts, F \sharp A B \sharp D if the harmony be meant to imply the extreme badness of "our hearts," it is surely a straining of technical means to a strange end. In the Credo, we cannot admire the passages in crotchets for the organ bass that lead from one to the next of the titles of the second person, nor can we like better the changes of key these passages introduce. The immense multiplication of church music now going on is, at least, of questionable advantage to religion and to art; and the production under notice does not solve the question in the affirmative.

SIMPKIN, MARSHALL AND CO.

The Singer's Handbook to the National Method of Vocal Music, containing the Songs, Rounds and Exercises, for the use of pupils. By W. W. Pearson.

IN the Preface to this work, Mr. Pearson quotes the following observation from a paragraph in a recent number of the Musical Times, which he says points distinctly to a method identical with his: "It is not because Mr. Curwen has proved that the 'moveable Do' is the natural system of noting music for class singers, that his method of arranging letters in a straight line should universally obtain. There is much to be said for the staff, whatever may be the number of lines it contains; and we have a fixed conviction that it will never disappear, even if vocal music for classes should ultimately be printed relatively instead of absolutely." As no mention is here made of a five-line staff, we can scarcely see that these remarks anticipate the proposed system of our author, especially as, although he writes relatively, he does so with an absolute notation. But let us give Mr. Pearson's description of his method in his own words. "The National Method of Vocal Music for Elementary Schools," he says, "is the only system of teaching singing from the established notation, on the principle of substitution of pitch," and further on he writes, "the use of the established notation, without the slightest addition or alteration, must recommend it to the favour of all true musicians." Now, allowing that this may be the first time that singing has been taught from the established notation "on the principle of substitution of pitch," we cannot admit that this notation is used "without the slightest addition or alteration," inasmuch as our present system names a note according to its absolute place in the ladder of sounds, and Mr. Pearson's system names it according to its place in the scale. That there may be an advantage in this, we are not prepared to deny, but the proof that it is a mere device adopted for the sake of making those sing who know nothing of music, is that every composition for the use of the class must be printed expressly for it, and that those who learn on this system will not afterwards be able to read from the established notation. In the face of these two facts, therefore, we cannot agree with Mr. Pearson that the mere use of the present system of notation "must recommend it to the favour of all true musicians." The exercises are generally carefully written, and melodious enough to interest young students. We enter no protest against the simplicity of the words selected—indeed we rather think that the less pretentious they are, the better are they suited for their purpose—but in these two lines of the Round, No. 86—

"I am quite tir'd of this Sol-fa-ing, I've forgot what you've been saying"

—we certainly have neither good rhyme nor good English. Some of the rules for reckoning the value of notes, too, appear to us somewhat eccentric; as, for instance, where, in C time, four quavers, a crotchet and a crotchet rest are counted, "One and, Two and, Three, 4:" surely the important "and" (or at least a beat for the quaver), is left out in the only two places where it is at all necessary. We have before us two parts of this work, and presume that it will be continued indefinitely. Members of singing classes may, and have a right to, regard Mr. Pearson as one of the zealous reformers of the day; but those who think more deeply are fully aware that to write relatively and truly we must have a new notation.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

Adieu. Mélodie pour Piano.

Weber's Concert-Stück. Paraphrase, for the Pianoforte.

La Fille du Régiment. Fantaisie brillante, pour Piano.

Bolero, for the Pianoforte.

Composed by Sydney Smith.

So industrious a Fantasia writer as Mr. Sydney Smith has but small occasion to appeal to the reviewer; for after having once discovered the exact article required for the market, there can be little doubt of his works obtaining a steady sale, whatever may be the amount of abstract merit contained in them. As long as he keeps, therefore, to "Arrangements" and "Paraphrases" we need only say that, according to the conventional phraseology, he "fully sustains his reputation;" but in his original pieces he appeals to us as a composer, and in this capacity we have no hesitation in saying that he has as much right to be heard as the many others who have but little to say, and say that little gracefully. The amateurs who have made Mr. Smith's name for him will perhaps be somewhat disappointed to find that his elegant little piece "Adieu" is written in G flat major; but presuming that they can surmount this difficulty, they will be sure to please the majority of listeners if they can play the melodious, though not very original, phrases contained in this composition with the requisite refinement of touch. Of the two pieces, however, we much prefer the "Bolero," which has a capital subject in B minor, a good effect being created by the change into the tonic major. We are inclined to think that this is one of the best of the many pianoforte works we have yet seen by this composer.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CONSECUTIVE SEVENTHS AND FALSE RELATIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Thanking you for the space already granted, may I crave a little more for some explanatory words? for I do not wish to appear as an apologist for faulty consecutives, and false relations generally. Whether the extreme case suggested by me last month be well or ill sounding, every reader, will of course, decide for himself. To my mind, the sevenths and the false relations are completely covered (in the free style of composition) by the movement of the inner part. Indeed, but for this principle, I hardly know what we should make of some (not to say most) of Bach's combinations, or in fact, of the simplest passing note with its harmony and without its context. But I think the question lies somewhat deeper than this. Granting any given progression to be offensive, is its use by a composer to be therefore condemned, or perhaps excused as an oversight? What if he intended to offend? Pupils are (very properly) forbidden to resolve a second into a unison. But when Schubert uses this means to express the scream of the child in the "Erl König," what shall we say? Shall we excuse the passage as a temporary aberration of a great master, or shall we not rather thankfully accept it as a stroke of genius, which once heard can never be forgotten? Certainly, I should be loth to advance the paradox that "music is the art of offending the ear." But however false, I do say that this statement is far nearer to the truth than this other. "Music is the art of pleasing the ear," yet I have heard something very like this said by those who would be ashamed to maintain that "painting is the art of pleasing the eye."

MUSICAL SETTINGS OF THE TE DEUM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—May I beg leave to offer a few remarks in reply to the letter under the above heading which appeared in your last number. I doubt whether the division of the hymn followed by your correspondent is quite reasonable and natural. Dean Comber also divides it into three parts:—1. Praise; 2. Creed; 3. Supplication. He makes the second section extend from v. 10 to 19 inclusive. It is obvious that there is nothing of the nature of a Creed before the 10th verse. Equally clear is it that the plain, dogmatic statements as to the Faith "acknowledged" by the "Church throughout all the world," which constitute a Creed, extend to the close of the 19th verse. Is your correspondent correct in his information as to the practice of prostration during that verse, in the Eastern Church? In the West the custom is to kneel during the 20th verse only. As to the musical treatment of these several portions of the hymn, I would remark that a careful study of the ancient setting, to which alone it was sung for more than a thousand years, would probably be highly suggestive to a thoughtful composer. That setting is especially interesting as an ancient example of a "Chant-service"—a mode of treatment supposed to have been invented in the 19th century. Merbecke's adaptation of this ancient chant-service may be seen in Mr. Helmore's Brief Directory of Plain-song. But the purely syllabic shape into which he threw the music renders it difficult to detect the chant forms there. These, however, are very obvious in the original music, which is published (under the misnomer of the "Roman Chant") by Messrs. Burns and Oates. They may also be clearly seen in the very exact adaptation of the music to the English words in Messrs. Doran and Nottingham's Canticles for Gregorian Chanting.

I would further enforce Mr. Löwenberg's advice as to becoming acquainted with the meaning of the words, by urging the necessity of a study of the hymn in its original language. The want of this has led that gentleman into a grave blunder. The words "cry aloud"—on the strength of which he condemns the very general and devout practice of singing the "Holy, Holy, Holy," pp—have no place in the hymn, but are simply an interpolation by the English translators. The Scriptural authority for the "practice in question" is the heavenly ritual described by Isaiah, in the 6th chapter at the 2nd verse, where we are told with what lowly reverence the angelic song is sung by those who stand nearest to the throne of God. But even if we had been told of the Seraphic Hymn, as of the "new song" of "the redeemed," that it was "like the voice of a great thunder," we might well feel constrained, in taking the Seraph's words into our "unclean lips," to sing them in a lowlier strain. And, once more: these words magnify not the Eternity, the Omnipotence, the Justice, or the Mercy of Almighty God, but that attribute of the Godhead, Holiness, the contemplation of which ought, beyond all the rest, to lead us to self-abasement. On this ground alone the lowly utterance of these words would seem most natural and fitting. If Dean Comber's analysis of this hymn is accurate, it follows that in any musical setting thereof—whether the "solemn composure" of the Cathedral use, or the simple chant-service—these three great divisions should be marked by corresponding changes in the character of the music. A further subordinate change should mark the 5th verse at each division. At verse 5 the narrative of the praise offered by the various orders of the rational creation is interrupted by the recital of the actual words of the Seraphic Hymn; the narration being resumed in verses 7–9. At v. 14 the oblique form in which the Creed has hitherto been expressed, is changed for a direct expression of faith addressed to our Blessed Lord. At v. 24, again, an incidental burst of praise interrupts the supplications, which are resumed at v. 26. It is interesting to note how these supplications become gradually more personal. At first they are offered for the whole Church, whose creed we have recited; verses 20–23 being thus a kind of response to verses 10–13. Then, after a short burst of praise, we pray for ourselves, who "daily magnify" God. Lastly, in the final verse, we pray each one for himself. Thus these last six verses correspond, in a measure, with the last six verses of the second section.

One might write almost unceasingly on this most interesting and suggestive topic, but I have been already too lengthy. I will only say, in conclusion, that if the above outline of the scheme of the Te Deum were borne in mind, not only might the more elaborate settings assume more definite form and design than is usual, but the simple chant-service might be made at once more expressive and more simple than those to which we are accustomed.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

CHR. THOMPSON.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

D. POWER.—We cannot notice any systems of notation which are not published.

P.—The photographs of living and deceased musicians are published by Frederick Bruckmann, 28, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden.

E. STUART BENGOUGH.—We cannot undertake to give our opinion upon progressions submitted to us by correspondents, unless they occur in published compositions sent for review.

T. C.—It is impossible to reply to such questions as our correspondent addresses to us.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

ABINGDON.—A concert took place in the Council Chamber on Monday evening, the 16th ult. The vocalists were Madame Thaddeus Wells, and a quartet party, consisting of Messrs. Bickley, Thornton, Robson, and Farley Sinkins; and Mr. Nicholson (solo flautist), Mdlle. Bertha Brouil (solo violinist), and Mr. T. Dodds (pianist). All the pieces in the programme were highly successful. Madame Wells was encored, and a like compliment was paid to Mdlle. Bertha Brouil and Mr. Richardson. The four-part singing of Messrs. Bickley, Thornton, Robson, and Farley Sinkins was loudly and deservedly applauded.

BANBURY.—A concert was given in the Corn Exchange, on Tuesday evening, the 17th ult., under the auspices of the Mechanics' Institute. The vocalists engaged were Madame Thaddeus Wells, Messrs. Bickley, Thornton, Robson, and Farley Sinkins; and the instrumentalists Mdlle. Bertha Brouil, violin; Mr. Nicholson, flute; and Mr. Dodds, piano. The programme was a very attractive one, and each piece was effectively rendered. Madame Wells and Mr. Nicholson were deservedly encored in "Lo! here the birdie lark," as was also Mdlle. Brouil for her violin solo, "The bird on the tree." The concert afforded much pleasure to a large audience.

BRIGHOUSE.—The opening of the new organ in the Parish Church took place on the 28th October, when Mr. Lockett, of Manchester, gave recitals, including several selections from Handel, Spohr, Wesley, Beethoven, Bach, &c. The instrument is built by Messrs. Conacher and Co., of Huddersfield. Services in connection with the opening of the organ were continued on the 1st ult., when the newly-appointed organist, Mr. Pearson, presided. The collections amounted to £68 7s. 6d.

CHESTER.—The first of a series of chamber concerts was given by Mr. H. S. Irons, deputy organist of Chester Cathedral, on Friday, the 6th ult. The programme consisted of selections from Mozart, Dussek, and Reissiger. The following artists were engaged: M. Vetter (violin), Mr. Brouil (viola), Mr. Avison (violinello), and Mr. Irons (piano-forte); vocalist, Miss Francis, from Shrewsbury. The manner in which the various pieces were performed called forth great applause. Mr. Irons was encored for his rendering of a Tarantella (Dohler), and Miss Francis received considerable applause for her several songs. Mr. Irons deserves great praise for his laudable efforts in introducing classical music into this city.

CLOONEY.—The first festival of the West Derry Association of Church Choirs was held in All Saints' Church, on the 28th October. The Association is composed of the choirs of the churches of Banagher, Carrick, Clooney, Cumber Upper, Dungiven, Faughanvale, Finlagan, Moville Upper, and Moville Lower, and is under the instruction of Mr. T. Palmer, choir-master and organist of All Saints' Church. The number of chorists was 184. Service commenced with the singing of Hymn 151 (Church Hymnal). The chants and hymns were:—Venite, Rev. Sir F. A. G. Ouseley; Te Deum, Helmore's No. 1; Psalms for the day, Rev. C. A. Wickes and Dr. W. Crotch; Jubilate Deo, Battis-hill; as an anthem, the Hymn 333 (by Mrs. Alexander), "The roseate hues of early morn," music by Mr. T. Palmer; Hymn 232, "Come, ye thankful people, come," Kyrie and Glorias, before and after the Gospel, T. Palmer; hymn before sermon, "O, worship the King," concluding hymn, "Praise, O! praise our God and King." Voluntaries:—Opening, Andante con moto, H. Smart; offertory, Cujus animam, Rossini; concluding, "Hallelujah chorus," Handel. Mr. T. Palmer presided at the organ with his usual ability.

ENFIELD.—The concert given by Mr. Henry Drake at the British schoolroom, Chase-side, on the 28th October, was highly appreciated by a large audience. The artists engaged for the occasion were Madame Edna Hall, Miss Helen Standish, and Mr. Stephens. The concerted music of the Excelsior Glee Union was exceptionally good. Mr. Stephen Jarvis presided at the pianoforte.

GLASGOW.—The first festival of the choirs of the diocese of Glasgow and Galloway took place on Saturday, the 31st October, in St. Mary's Church, and was a great success. Mr. H. A. Lambeth, who presided at the organ, played Mendelssohn's Fourth Sonata which was just concluded as the chorists entered the church. The Psalms were No. 103 to R. Cooke in G major, No. 118 to J. Tule in D major, and No. 150 to the popular grand chant by Humphreys. The latter was sung throughout, except in the Gloria, in unison. The Cantate Domino and Deus Misereatur were to Hopkins in B flat. The Creed was recited to the free organ accompaniment of Mr. Lambeth. The anthem, "Praise the Lord," by Sir George Elvey, was very successfully given by the choir. "The strain upraise" (Sullivan), the offertory hymn by Redhead, "Holy offerings, rich and rare," the Te Deum, by Smart, in F, the "Hallelujah chorus," and the Recessional hymn, "We love the place, O God," were also sung. Mr. Whitham conducted.

HALIFAX.—On Tuesday evening, the 17th ult., Dr. Spark, of Leeds, gave a lecture to the members and friends of the Halifax Literary and Philosophical Society, in the Dean Clough Institute, on "Haydn, the Musical Composer: His Life and Compositions." There was a large audience. The lecturer sketched, in a very interesting manner, an outline of the life of the great composer. Vocal and instrumental illustrations were given by Dr. Spark (pianoforte), Mr. J. W. Sykes (violin), Miss E. C. Walker, Miss Jenny Taylor, Mr. E. Kemp, and Mr. Dods. At the close a vote of thanks was warmly accorded to the lecturer. Mr. Thomas Shaw presided.

LEEDS.—St. George's Church was reopened for divine service on the 1st ult., after an interval of four months, during which time it has been repainted and decorated, and various alterations made. The organ has been considerably improved by Messrs. Wordsworth and Maskell, of Leeds, under the direction of Dr. Spark. The services were rendered most efficiently and impressively by the newly-organised choir. The collections amounted to nearly £74.—The opening of the new organ at Bethel Chapel, Meadow-road, by Dr. Spark, on the 3rd ult., was attended by a crowded congregation. The instrument (built by Hepworth of Wakefield) has an exceedingly sweet tone, and in every respect does the utmost credit to the builder. A well chosen programme of pieces was excellently rendered by Dr. Spark; and the singing of the choir in the selection from the Messiah was admirable.—A CONCERT took place in the Albert Hall, on Tuesday, the 17th ult., the chief feature of which was the chorus, which was composed of the united choirs of the principal Nonconformist churches of the town, under the efficient conductorship of Mr. M. P. Clough. The rendering of Bishop's "Hail to the chief," the Gipsy Chorus, from Preciosa, and "O Father, whose almighty power" were exceedingly good. Miss Annie Woods sang, with much effect, "Esmeralda," and Weber's Cavatina, "Although a cloud o'erspread the heavens," and Miss E. Dixon did full justice to Dr. Spark's new song, "The only home." Miss H. A. Fox made her début in Horn's "Thro' the wood," creating a highly favourable impression, and Mr. T. Thompson was extremely successful in the "Death of Nelson." Miss Bowers, and Mr. Burniston (basso) also contributed songs. Mr. Joseph Parkin ably presided at the pianoforte.

LEICESTER.—The talent engaged by the Leicester Musical Society for the inauguration of the season attracted to the Temperance Hall, on the 18th ult., a fashionable and appreciative audience. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington gave "Softly sighs" with true dramatic feeling, and after singing the "Bird of love," she was recalled, and sang "Come back to Erin." The "Spinning song" was also encored. Mdlle. José Sherrington's "Shadow song," and Mr. Hilton's song, "Warrior bold," had likewise to be repeated. The duet for flute and clarinet, played by Messrs. Nicholson and Lazarus, cannot be spoken of too highly. Miss Bennett presided at the pianoforte, and her performance was highly appreciated. The band of the Society displayed much proficiency in the operatic selection from Lucia di Lammermoor, arranged by Mr. Nicholson, especially the solo players—clarinet, Mr. Rowlett; bassoon, Mr. Wykes; flute, Mr. Vaughan.

LEWES.—The first concert of the season in connection with the Mechanics' Institute was given on Thursday evening, the 12th ult., under the direction of Mr. J. C. Ward, an admirable programme being provided. Leslie's trio, "Memory," was well sung by Miss Eliza Ward, Mr. Burgess Perry, and Mr. Ward, and had to be repeated. Miss Ward followed with "Bid me discourse," which was given with much taste, and Mr. Burgess Perry was heard to great advantage in Hatton's song, "The lark now leaves his watery nest," which was vociferously encored. Mr. Ward's performance on the concertina comprised Scotch airs and an operatic selection, both of which displayed the beauties of the instrument and the skill of the performer, and were much applauded. Mr. H. Carvill (bass) rendered good service in the concerted music, and contributed two songs. The subscribers may be congratulated on having had such an auspicious opening of their season.

LIVERPOOL.—The ninth subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 3rd ult. The principal artists were Madame Campobello-Sinico and Signor Uriò; solo pianoforte, Miss Agnes Zimmermann. The orchestral works were Haydn's Military Symphony, No. 12, of the set composed for Salomon's Concerts in 1794, the overtures to the Merry Wives of Windsor (Nicolai) and Oberon (Weber). The concert closed with the March in Le Prophète, Meyerbeer. Miss Agnes Zimmermann played with admirable clearness and delicacy Beethoven's Concerto in E flat, Schumann's Romance in C minor, and Chopin's Grand Valse, Op. 42. The tenth subscription concert of the Society was given on the 17th ult., and was chiefly devoted to a performance of Schumann's Cantata, The Pilgrimage of the Rose. Principal artists: Madame Alvsleben, Miss Jane Wells, Miss Helen D'Alton, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Maybrick. The overtures were Schumann's Genoveva, Auber's Masaniello (encored), and Beethoven's Men of Prometheus. The second part of the concert was miscellaneous.

MATTERSEA.—A successful concert was given in the schoolroom, on the 2nd ult., in aid of the Clergy Orphan Society. The vocalists included many of the leading amateurs of the neighbourhood, amongst whom we must mention the Misses Postlethwaite and Miss Parkinson. Mr. J. H. Eyre, choirmaster, of Doncaster, contributed some songs, including a harvest song, written and composed for the occasion by John Walter, Esq., of The Hall. The room was crowded, and a good sum handed over to the charity.

NOTTINGHAM.—On Thursday, the 19th ult., the second concert of the Sacred Harmonic Society took place, when Signor Randegger's Cantata, Fridolin, was performed, followed by a miscellaneous selection. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington sang, in a brilliant manner, the music of the Countess, a part composed for her, and Mr. Nelson Varley and Mr. Hilton were excellent in their respective parts. The choruses were well rendered by the members of the Sacred Harmonic Society; Mr. Henry Farmer conducted. In the second portion of the entertainment Mdlle. José Sherrington was rapturously encored in the "Shadow Song," a similar compliment being paid to Madame Sherrington for her rendering of the "Bird of love." Miss E. Marriott presided at the pianoforte. The concert was very successful.

PLYMOUTH.—A very successful performance of Macfarren's St. John the Baptist was given in the Guildhall on the 28th October. The solo vocalists were Miss Emily Spiller, Miss Alice Fairman, Mr. Nelson Varley, and Mr. Thurley Beale, all of whom were highly efficient. The choruses, too, were exceedingly well rendered.

RUGBY.—Miss Emily M. Lawrence gave an evening concert on the 19th ult., assisted by Mr. Lewis Thomas, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant. Sir W. S. Bennett's Sonata, "Maid of Orleans" and selections from Mendelssohn and Liszt were played by Miss Lawrence. Mr. Lewis Thomas sang "O ruddier than the cherry," "In shelter'd vale," and "The Cruiskeen Lawn," and was encored in each song, a similar compliment being paid to Mr. Henry Guy for his rendering of "Adeleida." Mdlle. Vaillant played, with much expression, Beethoven's Romance in F for Violin, and joined Miss Emily M. Lawrence in a duet from Guillaume Tell.

SCARBOROUGH.—The Amateur Vocal and Instrumental Society of this town (Conductor, Dr. Sloman) has advertised its programme for this season. Amongst other attractive works Bennett's Woman of Samaria, and new part-songs by Gounod and Macfarren are announced for performance.

SHEFFIELD.—The band of the 2nd W. Y. Hallamshire Rifles, under the direction of their bandmaster, Mr. J. M. Fordie, gave a concert at the Albert Hall on the 3rd ult., with the assistance of Miss Anna Williams (vocalist), Mr. H. Ball (solo cornet), and Mr. A. Robinson (solo trumpet). The overture to Auber's Crown Diamonds and Cavallini's Fantasia on Scottish Airs, were given in a style reflecting great credit on the band and conductor. Mr. J. W. Phillips was the accompanist.—On the 5th ult. Mr. Charles Harvey gave a ballad concert, Mdlle. Clara Suter, Miss M. Severn, Mr. H. Guy, and Mr. Winn being the vocalists, with Mr. Harper as solo trumpet. Mr. Guy, in "The rose song," and a duet with Mdlle. Clara Suter, had a warm reception. Miss Severn and Mr. Winn were also highly successful. Mr. M. Watson played two solos and also acted as accompanist.—On the 10th ult. Mr. Pyatt, of Nottingham, gave a concert, when the Hall was crowded. Miss Helen D'Alton and Mr. Vernon Rigby were the vocalists. The band of the Grenadier Guards, under the direction of Mr. Dan. Godfrey, played the March from Eli, accompanied by the organ, at which Mr. Smith presided. Mr. Rigby and Miss D'Alton were well received. Mr. Roe, in his concertina solo, was encored.—On the 17th ult. Mr. Charles Harvey gave the second of this season's subscription concerts, Mdlle. Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdlle. J. Sherrington, Mr. Nelson Varley, and Mr. R. Hilton being the vocalists, Mr. J. Cheshire (solo harpist), and Miss Emma Barnett (piano soloist and accompanist). Mdlle. Sherrington sang, with her accustomed excellence, and was most rapturously received. Mdlle. J. Sherrington was encored in the "Shadow Song." Mr. Nelson Varley, in "Sound an alarm," deserves especial mention, the trumpet obbligato being admirably played by Mr. H. Ball. Mr. Cheshire's harp solos and Miss Barnett's pianoforte solos were exquisitely given.

SHREWSBURY.—Mr. Boucher is keeping faith with the public. At the second of the series of six concerts, which was given at the Music Hall on the 17th ult., the programme was thoroughly deserving of the epithet "classical." The performance began with a quartet for strings, in E flat, by Schubert (Op. 125.) The parts were taken by Messrs. Thomas, Cover, Watkis, and Boucher, who played exceedingly well together. The second quartet for strings, with which the concert concluded, was Beethoven's well-known work in C, Op. 18, No. 2. A graceful minuet, from one of the same composer's piano and violin duets, was exceedingly well rendered by Messrs. Boucher and Cover, and Mr. Ffrench Davies performed several pieces on the harp, which effectively contrasted with the severer work of the evening.

SLOUGH.—Mr. Orlando Christian's annual concert took place at the Mechanics' Institution on Tuesday evening, the 3rd ult. The services of Madame Thaddeus Wells (soprano), Miss Joyce Maas (contralto), and Mr. Henry Nicholson (flautist), were engaged, and a programme of popular music was performed, to the satisfaction of an appreciative audience, many encores being awarded. Madame Wells and Mr. Nicholson accompanied.

SOUTH NORWOOD.—The first concert of the season of the Society, under the able conductorship of Mr. W. J. Westbrook, took place on the 16th ult., when a selection from Samson was successfully given. Among the most effective solos were "Let the bright seraphim," sung by Miss Jessie Royd, and "Total eclipse," sung by Mr. Stedman. The chorus, which has been strengthened, was highly efficient. The Hall was filled by a very appreciative audience.

STAFFORD.—On Sunday, the 15th ult., the organ in Christ Church, which has been greatly improved by the addition to the pedal organ of a principal stop, was re-opened by the organist, Mr. W. A. Marson. The work has been carried out by Messrs. Banfield and Son, of Birmingham, in a most satisfactory manner, the money having been raised by subscriptions through the efforts of Mr. W. A. Marson.

TIPTON.—On Sunday, the 1st ult. a fine new organ, built by Dresser, of Walsall, was opened in the Primitive Methodist Chapel. The case of the instrument is of pitch pine, varnished, and the front pipes are decorated in gold and colours. Mr. H. W. Rogers, organist of Rushall Church, presided at the organ, and played selections from the works of Handel, Mozart, Wely, and H. Smart, with much effect, displaying the qualities of the organ to great advantage.

WEDNESBURY.—The Philharmonic Society gave the first concert of the season, in the Town Hall, on Monday evening, the 26th October, when Signor Randegger's Cantata, Fridolin, and Rossini's "New Patriotic Hymn" were performed for the first time. The principal artists were Mrs. A. J. Sutton, Messrs. Hodgson, Woodward, and Lander. Mr. G. Bond presided at the organ, and Mr. Stimpson, of Birmingham, conducted. The performance was highly satisfactory, and well received by an enthusiastic audience.

WOMERSLEY.—The first of a series of musical entertainments was given under the presidency of the vicar, on the 3rd ult. The choir, under the direction of Mr. J. H. Eyre, of Doncaster, sang a number of part-songs, "Oh hush thee, my babe" and "Hark! the lark" being especially good. Songs, duets, &c., were given by Lady Hawke, the Misses Fetherstonhaugh, and Mr. Eyre, who was encored in each of his songs. The accompaniments were played by Lady Hawke and Mr. Eyre.

YORK.—Among the musical events of last month had to be recorded a first—though small step—towards the restoration of Oratorio to its proper place, viz., our grand Cathedrals. At the re-opening of Chichester Cathedral, over and above the proper services of the day, sundry anthems were sung for the edification and refreshment of those gathered in the beautiful building, by that fine body of singers, the Choir of the Cathedral Benevolent Fund, consisting of selected members from the Cathedral Choirs of England. We have now to record a further and more decided step towards what is truly the real resolution of the Worcester difficulty. On the 12th and 13th of last month York Minster was re-opened after the re-building and beautifying of the south transept. The occasion was fittingly celebrated by special musical services, in addition to early Communion, Matins, and Evensong, the latter, on each day, being a high service. Again the choir of the Choir Benevolent Fund helped to further the important Church movement. The first day's special musical performance began with Ouseley's noble anthem, "Great is the Lord," as fine a specimen of our great cathedral school as can be found in our choir books—loyally true to the soundly rated sentence, touching English Church music of Sir Frederick's learned predecessor in the Oxford music chair, Dr. Crotch—"New music, but no new style." The anthem was sung as such a body of cathedral singers would be sure to sing a composition so congenial to their feelings and training—in all breadth, substance, and purity of tone. After this came two Collects, and then the special feature of the morning's performance—the Dettingen Te Deum. The tones of the organ in Handel's great work were supplemented by three trumpets—with, it can hardly be said, a great degree of success. First, the performers laboured under the serious disadvantage of having to add four inches to their at all times somewhat unmanageable instruments—to bring them down to the pitch of the organ; and secondly, when the pure tone was fully brought out, its lightning-like brilliancy seemed so ill to accord with the comparatively flat and pointless organ notes. The ear seemed to crave oboe tone, or some other intermediate to link together trumpet and organ. But probably the only true cure would have been to have silenced the organ altogether, and to have brought in the rest of the orchestra. The Te Deum commenced somewhat tamely and uncertainly, but as the singers seemed to get accustomed to the resonance of the vast nave—tone and steadiness improved, and the singing became very grand, and kept improving to the very end. The bass solos were sung by Mr. Grice, of Durham, formerly of York Minster choir, with all the weight, breadth, and impersonality of the true cathedral style. On the second day after Tallis's "Festival Litany," Mendelssohn's "Twenty-second Psalm" was sung without accompaniment; and again, those who know what real cathedral singing is, had ample proof that the ancient art, differing from the oratorio style, as the anthem differs from the oratorio itself, has in no wise decayed in our days. Again, in Mr. Dyson's singing we had a perfect example. As long as there are Grices and Dysons in our cathedrals we need not ask whence are to come the solo singers for the coming Church Oratorio. If the object be to touch hearts and bring home holy words to edification, our cathedrals can supply all that is wanted. Just as it should be—for real Church music is for all—non-musical and musical alike were, we may almost say, awe-stricken with Mendelssohn's short Messiah, as we may call it. Of course it is Mendelssohn's. Yet we may boldly assert that never was music heard to more edification than that 22nd Psalm, as its awful simplicities swelled and rolled through England's greatest Minster on that 13th day of November. With so much to praise, it does seem ungenerous to blame. Still, we cannot refrain from expressing a hope that, when the Church Oratorio does in its fulness and might return to our cathedrals, it will not be considered necessary to begin by playing at soldiers in church to the tune of some bellicose "Processional." By all means let choir and clergy enter to their respective places in due order. And this may surely be promoted by the singing of some rhythmical tune—common sense would say, wedded to words expressive of the thoughts that should fill the hearts of those who gather into God's house. But why go prowling around the aisles of the Cathedral, making circles round the ultimate place of settlement, like a dog about to lie down? And if at York the Dean did give up his own opinion to the now prevailing—but, we hope, transitory—custom, why should the organ have been set to work to keep grinding the tune over and over again, in stolid tones, not loud enough to be heard by the choir, as it receded, but quite loud enough to show to the people that choir and organ were all across. If there be anything in a procession, it is the effect of the approaching or receding body of sound,—utterly destroyed if a stationary organ is to keep playing. And, after all, could not those who could so faultlessly sing the 22nd Psalm, without accompaniment, be trusted to sing a hymn tune without loss of time or pitch? But when the real performance of the day was so entirely satisfactory, we ought not to find fault with what was given in. Ample have the York Minster Opening Services proved: 1st. That in our cathedral choirs we have a nucleus round which to gather other church singers for the formation of the chorus of the Church oratorio. 2nd. That the cathedrals can furnish soloists sufficient for the rendering sacred song to edification. 3rd. That the people will throng the largest cathedrals in the land, to listen with earnestness and reverence; and lastly, That the prosaic difficulty—funds—need not stay progress, when the York Services realised upwards of £1100.

All the chants are arranged in short score, immediately above the words, and may be sung in the usual four-part harmony, exactly as written. Should unison-singing be preferred, the harmonisation is then available as an organ accompaniment. The "Venite" is printed before the Psalms for each day of the month throughout the book, in order to remove all doubt as to the manner of pointing the words to the varying length of the chants, as well as to secure appropriate keys for the succeeding psalms in the morning office. The "Gloria Patri" also appears in its place at the end of every Psalm, pointed as the rhythm of the chant may require.

May be had separately.

MOUNT MORIAH,

(THE TRIAL OF ABRAHAM'S FAITH),

AN ORATORIO BY

J. FREDERICK BRIDGE, Mus. Doc., OXON.,
Organist of Manchester Cathedral.

London: Novello, Ewer and Co., and all Music-sellers.

From the Musical Times, Nov., 1874.

"Displays Dr. Bridge's scholarship to advantage, his graceful power of melody, and his general command of harmonic and contrapuntal resources. 'Mount Moriah' does honour to its author, and will win him the esteem of musicians."

From the Monthly Musical Record, Nov., 1874.

"We have devoted some little space to the analysis of 'Mount Moriah' because it is an oratorio which is not only most creditable to its composer, but also a worthy representative of English music. The difficulties it offers to performers are by no means excessive; and it will, both from its moderate length and its its intrinsic merits, be found worthy the attention of musical societies."

From the Musical Standard, Oct., 1874.

"Well deserves practical acquaintance, and from its dimensions, its perspicuity of intention, and the variety it exhibits in small compass, it may well claim attention this season from choral societies looking for something likely to repay study."

From the Choir, Oct., 1874.

"Those who look for a work combining good musicianship with artistic power will not be disappointed."

In publishing the above, Chappell and Co. feel they are supplying a want long felt by Amateur Organists, as this work removes the difficulty amateurs experience in performing Handel's songs from the scores. Being published in three lines, the solo parts and accompaniments are easily and effectively distributed.

The words of each song being printed upon the top line will be found of great service to the performer in giving proper expression to the songs.

By WILLIAM SPARK, Mus. D., Organist of the Town Hall, Leeds.

No. 1, CONCERT FANTASIA IN B MAJOR. PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

ADAGIO—MODERATO—ANDANTE—FINALE.

"THIS, the first of a series of original compositions from the fertile genius of this accomplished musician, is well adapted for concert performance. The Fantasia will be an acceptable addition to the repertory of organ performers." —Western Times.

"The piece is well adapted for its purpose, namely, to appear upon the programme of a concert, or recital, for it at the same time combines legitimate and good effect with facility of performance."—Musical Standard.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS.

For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass.

The present collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the Favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The Words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small classes.

MUSICAL LIBRARY, EDITED BY CHARLES HALLÉ.

THE favour with which "The Practical Pianoforte School" has been received by Professors and Students has led to the present Publication, in which the principal features of the "School" will be preserved. The "Musical Library" will embrace Solos and Duets, both Classical and Modern, selected for their intrinsic value, all of which will be thoroughly fingered, supplemented with signs of expression and foot-notes explaining ornaments where necessary, and the use of the Pedals carefully marked. Every piece will be prefaced by a page of Exercises written expressly by me, and the degree of difficulty will be indicated by the letters A, B, C, D, E, corresponding with the five Sections of the "Practical Pianoforte School."

CHARLES HALLÉ.

FORSYTH BROTHERS, beg to announce that the first four Numbers of the new Publication, "Musical Library," edited by CHARLES HALLÉ, will be ready early in January. Each Number will be sold at half the marked price, and postage free.

* The title "Very Difficult" is not meant to convey the idea that this Section will provide pieces of the extreme difficulty suited to exceptional cases only (this being beyond the scope of a "School"); it is by taxing in a high degree the general Student's intellectual faculties as well as their mechanical powers that the works included will be found "very difficult" to play well.

CAUTION.—Being in London, and finding that a number of imitations of my now celebrated SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS are offered to the public as the genuine Instruments, I think it due to the Musical Profession, Amateurs, and the Trade, to make the following statement:—Nine years ago, after much thought and labour, I succeeded in completing the short Grand, adopting the cross-string principle of Steinway, to lessen the size, and making many improvements in the sound-board and action; and it is well known to the musical world of Germany that I was the originator of these Pianos. Since that time additional improvements have been effected, the sale has gradually increased, and at the present time I have more than 250 workmen engaged exclusively on their manufacture. The acknowledged superiority of these Pianofortes to any other description of the same size has caused them to be closely imitated by various makers; and, in one instance, the name "Beethoven Grand," which I originally used as a distinctive trade mark, but have since abandoned, has been adopted; and with unexampled modesty, the public is now invited to accept the copy as the original, and to consider the genuine as spurious. Among the numerous testimonials I have received (including five medals), I may be permitted to mention that his Majesty the King of Saxony, who takes great interest in Art and Manufactures, and is in addition an excellent musician, honoured my manufactory with a visit on February 25th last, and was pleased to express his entire satisfaction. The Depot for my Pianofortes in London is at Mr. FLAVELL'S, 26, North Audley Street, W., where they may be seen in great variety.—ERNST KAPS. Sole Importer—CHARLES RUSSELL.

FABRICATION SUPÉRIEURE ET ARTISTIQUE.
MILLEREAU & CO., OF PARIS.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR ARTISTS.
Illustrated Catalogues free to any part of the world.
London: 3, Millbank-row, Westminster Palace, S.W.

THE CYLINDRICAL FLUTE, as made by MILLEREAU, is adopted for Instruction at the Paris Conservatoire, to the exclusion of every other system. It is the Instrument most in favour with the principal Artists.

THE "CLARABELLA," a New First String for Violin. Durability and purity of tone unequalled. Sample 8 stamps, or five strings 30 stamps.—Williams, 54, Larches-street, Sparkbrook, Birmingham.

PEDAL PIANOFORTES.—The ordinary Organ action (Pedal attachment) having been found ill-adapted to the light touch of a Piano, and the great expense of the work having prevented many Students and others from obtaining the advantage of Pedal practice, the Advertiser has invented a novel, ingenious and most simple action, which does away with the hard blow complained of in the Organ action, and gives a tone according to the light or heavy touch of the foot on the Pedal. This simple invention reduces the expense to the minimum.

The Advertiser will forward at the following prices:—A set of Radiating and Concave Pedals (30 notes, C to F), of best materials and workmanship, with action ready for attaching to any Pianoforte, £4 10s. Or with straight Pedal Board, £3 15s.

Address (letter only), Mr. J. Hamilton, 11, Brunswick-street, City-road, Bristol.

ROYLANCE'S MUSICAL INSTRUMENT EXCHANGE.—If you wish to Learn, Purchase, Sell, Exchange, or Hire, an English Concertina, Harmonium, Organ-Accordion, or any other Musical Instrument, go to C. ROYLANCE, 38, Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square.

Musical Boxes carefully Tuned and Repaired. Any Instrument may be had at once, and paid for by Monthly Instalments.

N.B.—Specialities in Musical Boxes, playing choice Selections from the Opera of "La Fille de Madame Angot," from £4 4s. List of all Musical Instruments post-free on application.

ORGANS with pedals, for Church or Chamber, from 35 guineas. HARMONIUMS, organ tone, for Chapels, Schools, &c., from 6 guineas. ORGAN HARMONIUMS, with German pedals, 25 guineas. PIANOS, 7 octaves, 21 guineas. COTTAGE PIANO, with 2½ octaves of pedals, 30 guineas.—William Sprague, 7, Finsbury-pavement, London. Established 1837.

SECOND-HAND PIANOFORTES.—150 by Broadwood, Collard, Erard, Allison, &c., from 4 guineas upwards. HARMONIUMS (New), from £5, in Walnut or Mahogany cases. Largest stock of Pianos and Harmoniums in London at Kelly and Co.'s, 11, Charles-street, Middlesex Hospital. Trade supplied.

TO ORGANISTS.—Capital Set of PEDALS (2½ octaves) with Piano attachment, made by WALKER, for SALE. Perfect and very little used. Cost 12 guineas; will be sold for £6 10s., including Stool.—G. A., 5, Lansdowne-place, Brunswick-square, W.C.

THROAT IRRITATION.—The Throat and Wind-pipe are especially liable to inflammation, causing soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use glycerine in the form of jujubes. Glycerine in these agreeable confections, being in proximity to the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, becomes actively healing. 6d. and 1s. packets (by post 8 or 15 stamps), labelled "JAMES EPPS & Co., Homœopathic Chemists. 48, Threadneedle-street, and 170, Piccadilly."

A STRADUARIUS VIOLIN for SALE. Apply by letter to T. H., 25, Brecknock-crescent, N.W.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

JANUARY 1, 1875.

THE LICENCE OF ARTISTS.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

TRULY, the art of music is, in some respects, most unfortunate. To this thesis I do not anticipate objection from any who have read Mr. G. A. Macfarren's masterly and conclusive paper "On Editing," in last month's Musical Times. They, presuming that the full meaning of the article was appreciated, and the evil exposed seen in all its ugliness, must ever since have been lamenting that the most beautiful of God's gifts stands in such evil plight. Necessarily in evil plight, and there's the worst of it. You cannot, by ever so much "taking thought," change the nature of music, any more than you can add an inch to your stature. The thing is so ethereal, so abstract in its essence, so little of this physical world, that it requires an agency to absorb and, so to speak, solidify it before it can be made evident to the sense. The god worshipped by Jubal's "listening brethren" was in the shell ere that proto-artist struck its chords; but they knew it not, and may have kicked out of their path the thing before which they, "wondering, on their faces fell." No other art is like this. The painter, the sculptor, and, in less degree, the poet, give definite expression to their imaginings. The works they produce appeal directly to the mind, and need no intermediary. You do not require an interpreter for a Madonna of Raphael; the veriest dolt can feel somewhere in his dull soul the force of purity and beauty. Nor is there a missing link between you and the god-like nobleness of the Apollo Belvidere, or the inimitable tenderness and sorrow of Milton's Lycidas. In all cases of which these are types, your mind is directly en rapport with that of the creator, and nothing can come between to affect the natural working of one upon the other. But music, poor music! When Beethoven rose on the eagle wings of his genius to the height of the Ninth Symphony, what was the immediate result? A mass of paper covered with ink-stains; differing no way in appearance from that other mass of paper which, because containing an abortive oratorio by Jones, has gone to the buttermen's. Nay, the chances are that Jones's work, neatly written and handsomely bound in joyful anticipation of British Museum honours, touches the buttermen's heart, and finds a place on his book-shelf, "to fill up," while the Ninth Symphony MS. is distributed to his customers. Here's the rub. Beethoven can do no more with his majestic art-creation, and it remains speechless and unlovely—a chaos of blots and lines—save to the very few who hold the key to its meaning and know which way to turn it in the lock. Now come the intermediaries. First, the editor, whose business it is to give the blots and lines their fixed and ultimate form—to decide upon and stereotype, as it were, the composer's intentions. About him I have nothing to say. A master hand has defined his liberty, and held up his licence to reprobation, for good and all. But the editor, when he has done his best or worst, has advanced matters little. The lute is still silent, or speaks only to that inner sense which Addison calls "reason's ear"—a sense possessed by very few. Somebody must come forward endowed with the power of a something which shall be to the creation of the composer what the breath of life was to the dry bones in the valley. "That something," says Voltaire, "must be very subtle: it is a breath; it is fire; it is ether; it is a quintessence; it is an intelligence; it is a number; it is harmony." But, whatever it be, it is wanted. Who has it? Here the executive artist steps in, with his "property" smile and bow, to say he has it.

I fear I am going to utter hard words about the executive artist, and desire, therefore, to deprecate his wrath, by showing, first of all, that he is what he is simply in the nature of things—what you, the reader, and I, the writer, would be were we in his place. It is of no use to "confound the nature of things." Anathemas won't change it; nor is there any reason why people should go into rages when the subject is discussed to the disadvantage of the particular nature in which they share. Artists are great people, very often greatly gifted people, which is quite another thing; but they occupy a place sorely trying to the weakness of human nature. The result is that, as a rule, and as artists, they are very imperfect people. Let me show, if I can, that, under present circumstances, they could hardly be other. The perfect artist is he who perfectly discharges his duties, which are humbly and patiently to find out what was in the mind of the composer; reverently and faithfully to reproduce it. Let this be understood in all its significance, for it is a key to the whole matter. An artist is the medium between composer and public. If, through him, the public see the composer in a distorted form, the medium is a bad one. So far there can be no question to argue. As well might we dispute Euclid's axiom that "things which are equal to the same thing are equal to one another." But, going a step further, let us note what repression of self the faithful discharge of an artist's duty involves. The artist is an agent and not a principal, a medium and not the thing conveyed, an interpreter and not the originator of the ideas expressed. In point of fact, he has no independent existence. The composer calls him into being, and apart from the composer there is no such thing as he. These words may grate harshly, and, at first sight, appear overstrained, but the reader has only to look carefully in order to discover that they do no more than express a plain truth in a plain form. But we have here another instance of truth which can only exist in the ideal. Artists do not, and practically cannot, act upon this notion of their place and duties. Everything around them stands in the way; because they live in a world where everything points to themselves as first and chief. There will come a time, let us hope, though it may now be in the distant future, when a less artificial state of things will prevail; but we have to do with the present, and the real wonder is that artists keep themselves from wholly going "to the bad." All the conditions under which they live, and move, and have their being, are in league to ruin them. Like the spoiled child of a family, whose mental and moral growth is stunted by an atmosphere of stupid indulgence, they are killed by kindness. Mark how the world treats them, and then marvel, if you can, at the result. They are paid far better than princes, in proportion to the labour done, but upon this I need not stop to insist. A thing is worth whatever it will fetch, and if a prima donna can exchange her notes, tale by tale, for those of the Bank of England, nobody has a right to grumble. It is far more important to observe how the thoughtless public intoxicate their favourites with that incense of adoration which made Herod fancy himself a god. Here is the real grievance; the true source of mischief. The thoughtless—nay, that is hardly the word—the ignorant public, instead of worshipping Jubal's shell, worship Jubal himself. Their gross, material sense cannot penetrate beyond the medium to the source of that which the medium transmits, nor distinguish between the transmitter and the thing transmitted. So the artist receives not only the honours fairly due to himself, but those which are the right of the composer and of art. The composer! What a farce it is to talk of him when his interpreter is concerned! He is but a name, an abstraction, a word used for definition's sake, something to put in a programme. We don't see him in the concert-room and opera-house save on the rare occasions when a claque draws him, badger-like, out of a hole for a brief moment. He does not wear diamonds and Worth's dresses pro bono publico, nor blandly shower smiles upon the "house;" he does not cultivate long hair and an interesting languor; he cannot shake on D in alt., nor give out an ut de poitrine; it is not the correct thing to talk about him in society, nor to secure his presence at an evening party in return for a hundred-guinea cheque. Get you gone, Mr. Composer, from the present argument. A useful man in your study, you are very little beside that dazzling lady, and that confident gentleman, who kindly condescend to identify your music with themselves. What wonder, I ask again, that, under conditions like these, the poor artists get the better part of their artistic nature sapped, till it tumbles off and is carried away by the torrent of adulation? Quaint old Jeremy Collier says somewhere, "Flattery is an ensnaring quality, and leaves a very dangerous impression. It swells a man's imagination, entertains his vanity, and drives him to a doting upon his own person." Of course it does, and the punishment of such mischief should fall upon the flatterers. Unfortunately, you cannot punish a many-headed public. Your only course is to wait for better times; doing a little railing now and then, in order to keep up around you an impression, vague at the best, that something is wrong somewhere.

But it now becomes needful to follow closely some of the results of the state of things just sketched; and, first of all, no one should be surprised to find artists logically reasoning, in practical fashion, from those ideas of themselves which the public have inculcated. The upshot of their reasoning takes many forms, tedious and unprofitable to notice here, as well as foreign to the present purpose. Upon one only I want the reader to keep his attention fixed, and it is that exhibited whenever the artist, putting himself above the composer, deliberately, and of malice aforethought, perverts his text. All other offences are venial compared with this, because a principle is involved, lax regard for which has already worked mischief of the gravest kind. But there are degrees of guilt, and it is easy to divide the sinners into two classes. Let me do so now, and deal, first, with those whom we can more readily pardon.

Of course we more readily pardon the vocal artist than any other. Like the poet, it may be said of him, nascitur non fit; and it often happens that he is born with no other qualification than a voice. In such a case—vox et preterea nihil—what would you have? Let none of us be unreasonable, and expect to gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles. But singers are more spoiled by the public than are their colleagues the instrumentalists; and it must also be granted that, at their worst, they do comparatively little harm. They hardly care enough about music to trouble their brains with speculative "readings," and when they interfere with the text, it is for obvious, personal, and, looking away from the principle involved, amusing reasons. The strong point of Madame A, perhaps, is agility, and wherever she, poor soul, can throw in a little flourish, it is done with an almost affecting unconsciousness that anybody could possibly mistake her purpose. Mr. B has a splendid chest A—the note which led his friends to remark years ago, "B, old fellow, you have got a fortune there"—and if the ignorant composer has not provided for it, he does that little job himself, knowing very well that the public want his A, and are ready to applaud it. Of course Mr. C does the same with his low E flat, and so on throughout the alphabetical family. Acts like these are wrong in principle, and lower the doers from the position of artists to that of mere self-seeking vocalists; but to art itself they work little harm, because they deceive no one. Everybody who applauds them draws a distinction between the line of rectitude and the line of error, though not caring enough about the first to have his enjoyment of the second lessened. That our singing friends will go on abusing the poor composer as long as the public permit them is a fact to be reckoned upon, but not to cause despair. We must sympathise with the injured party, of course, unless he has bought the singer with a "royalty;" and so made his artistic offspring pass through the fire unto Mammon, in which case he deserves all he gets.

Coming now to the greater offenders, it should be said for them, first of all, that what they do may spring from higher motives than those which influence vocalists. The singer acts from a spirit of selfishness. His instrumental colleague, on the other hand, having nothing to gain by change, and being, generally speaking, a musician by instinct as well as education, tries to carry out some theory, or give effect to some conclusion, when he perverts the composer's text. In all ages well-meaning people have been terrible mischief-makers; and there is no greater enemy to music than the executant who honestly believes that he is at liberty to decide and act upon what a composer might, should, or would have intended to express, but didn't. I do not overlook the chances that a craving for originality may sometimes influence artists in this respect. If a man bent upon distinction cannot acquire it in one way he will try another, and of all others the shortest is a well put on appearance of originality. But, as a rule, the instrumentalists who abuse their position do so because they honestly believe that service can be done to art, and justice to their own discernment, in that particular way. The motive is unimpeachable, but what shall be said of the results to which it leads? Do we not see music abused; composers wronged; great works misrepresented; and public taste misled, all in the name of art? Details might be cited ad nauseam. How often we find a composition so transformed by a "new reading" that its own author would scarcely recognise it! Here, the tempo is changed, with supreme disregard of printed directions: there, the traditions of the period to which the work belongs are contemptuously ignored. In this case a pianist thunders out in octaves what should be played in single notes; in that he plays passages such as, to his mind, the composer would have written under specified conditions. But why go through the weary catalogue? All its items are known to those for whom this article is intended, and I pass on, therefore, to a conclusion which must be in part a protest, in other part an appeal.

To record, as is done here and now, a protest against that licence of artists which involves a breach of their trust as interpreters may be the duty of all amateurs, and may have an effect proportioned to its publicity, and the influence of him who makes it. But protest can practically avail nothing so long as the bulk of the musical public worship the agent rather than the principal, the medium rather than the thing conveyed. In view of this, appeal has an obvious raison d'être. Let those among artists who are such in more than name set a noble example of reverence and faithfulness to the great thoughts it is their duty to interpret. Let all who by speech or pen can help to disseminate right principles on this vital question lose no opportunity of doing so; and let the enlightened section of the public be quick to repudiate sympathy with those performers whose labours mean misrepresentation, and who, like a bad mirror, distort whatever they reflect. This done, the snake, if not killed, will be scotch'd,—in its degree, a good result.

THE HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS.

BY HENRY C. LUNN.

THE associations surrounding these well-known Rooms are so deeply rooted in the mind of musical professors and amateurs in this country, that the announcement of their sale and appropriation to other purposes than that to which they have been devoted for so many years was received with universal regret. The aristocratic patronage of music in England, like the aristocratic patronage of literature, may be said to have fostered and nourished it in its infancy; and it is not likely, now that it is strong and vigorous enough to dispense with this aid, that these services should be forgotten, or that the home in which the art was so carefully nursed should not be regarded with due reverence. Unlike our more modern Concert-halls, which are especially adapted for the people, these Rooms were especially adapted for the nobility and those moneyed aristocrats who, either from taste or fashion, were content to devote a portion of their time and capital to the support of struggling music. The general air of elegance observable in all the arrangements of the concert-room and its approaches will sufficiently confirm our assertion. The ante-room, with fireplace and seats—the long mirrors, reflecting the costumes of the audience—the Royal box, with a smaller one on each side for the ladies and gentlemen in attendance—the spacious retiring-room, and even the rooms appropriated to the artists (sufficiently commodious of course to accommodate those noble patrons who might perchance flit in and out during the evening), convince us that the concert-room of the period was simply regarded as a drawing room where the privileged few could meet after dinner, hear music, and enjoy as much conversation as the rules of politeness would allow.

The history of these Rooms is, to a great extent, the history of music in England. The conversion of a portion of the building into an Assembly Room was effected by John Andrea Gallini, John Christian Bach and Charles Frederick Abel, who purchased the premises from Lord Wenman in 1774. Gallini was a dancing-master, who taught the family of George the Third; Bach was the eleventh son of Sebastian Bach, and Abel was the celebrated performer on the viol da gamba, an instrument which appears to have faded from our memory since his death. Gallini was evidently a man of much enterprise, for not only did he become the manager of the Opera House (then the King's Theatre) in the Haymarket, but he bought the shares of Bach and Abel in the Hanover-square Rooms, and made most important alterations and improvements in the premises. A great impetus was given to the art when Salomon brought over Haydn to England; for the twelve Symphonies written by this composer especially for his concerts, which were given at the Hanover-square Rooms, not only excited the attention of the music-lovers of the time, but remain to the present day as acknowledged favourites of the concert-room. Their composer conducted the performance of his works, the papers announcing that "Signor Haydn would preside at the harpsichord." King George the Third and his Queen, Charlotte, used frequently to attend the grand balls given at the Hanover-square Rooms where, in the Queen's Tea-room (as it was called) is placed, over the mantel-piece, a large looking-glass, presented by His Majesty. The Ancient Concerts, formed in 1776, were not at first given in these Rooms. They commenced at the Tottenham-street Rooms (now the Prince of Wales's Theatre), were afterwards taken to the Concert-room of the King's Theatre, Haymarket, and became located in 1804 at the Hanover-square Rooms, the Directors having taken a lease of the premises from the proprietor (then Sir John Gallini) at a rental of £1,000 per annum. At these concerts the finest works of the best composers of all countries were given, and their cessation in 1848 was deeply deplored by many of the most earnest musicians. When we consider that the subscription (which had formerly been higher) was six guineas (with the privilege of attending the rehearsals) for eight performances, or five guineas for the concerts only, there can be little doubt that the appeal for support was made solely to the aristocracy and wealthy gentry. It was customary for the Director of the evening to entertain his brothers in office at dinner; and we can say, from experience, that the amount of somnolence, generated by the combined effects of feasting and ancient music, which prevailed amongst the occupants of the privileged seats was such as we have never seen in any other concert-room. But it was known to be an aristocratic lounge; and to look upon the faces of the leading nobility, even in sleep, was something: it is true that modern musical audiences have, as a rule, improved in every respect; but let us not forget that, although the Ancient Concerts had thoroughly done their work when they ceased, that work has left results which could scarcely have been effected by any other means.

The first concert of the Philharmonic Society was given on the 8th March, 1813, at the Argyll Rooms (corner of Argyll Place, Regent Street); when these premises were destroyed by fire in 1830, they were transferred to the Concert-room of the Opera, and were removed to the Hanover-square Rooms in 1833, where they continued until, yielding to the necessity of appealing to more popular audiences, they were given at St. James's Hall, a change which dates only six seasons back. The Rooms, at the decease of the late Misses Gallini, nieces of the former proprietor, passed into the hands of Mr. R. Cocks (the eminent music publisher), who however let them on lease to Mr. Martin until December 1861, when he took possession of them, and, after renovating and entirely re-decorating them, the concert-room, looking so bright and cheerful that its best friends could hardly recognise it, was re-opened with a performance of Mr. Henry Leslie's choir on the 8th January, 1862, the Philharmonic Society commencing its fiftieth season (a jubilee year) in the same month. The pamphlet published by Mr. Cocks on the restoration of the Rooms (from which we gather the above particulars) drew much attention to the admirable manner in which the Concert-room has been constructed for sound: the smallest piano is distinctly audible, and the most powerful forte produces no confusion, whilst the absence of galleries gives an air of comfort to the audience part which cannot be realised in any other Hall built for musical performances.

We have dwelt upon the early historical records of the Hanover-square Rooms; but how many incidents connected with them, within our own recollection, crowd upon us as we write. Well indeed do we remember the Recitals of "Mr. William Sterndale Bennett," who, with a pianoforte on a raised platform in the centre of the room, not only revealed to his listeners the beauties of classical chamber music, but told them how to play it. Then do we, in imagination, again people the orchestra with the numerous eminent artists who have for many years passed away. Sir George Smart, Cipriani Potter, Sir Henry Bishop, Charles Lucas, and many others, stand once more before the conductor's desk; and a vision, too, of a certain evening occurs to us when Mendelssohn, bâton in hand, and with an anxious face, bent over the side of the orchestra to catch the sign, from Mr. Anderson, for commencing the National Anthem, at the precise moment Her Majesty appeared at the door of the room.

Reminiscences such as these might be almost indefinitely multiplied; but we must not be tempted into believing that the patience of our readers will not be exhausted because we have not exhausted our subject. The Royal Academy of Music—for years so intimately associated with these Rooms as to make former students of the institution cling with the fondest attachment to their memory—gave a concert on the 19th ult., the last ever to be heard within its walls. It was a graceful act of Mr. Cocks to place the concert-room at the disposal of the Academy for a farewell performance; for, not only amongst the audience, but amongst the artists in the orchestra, how many were there who took a final leave, on this occasion, of the locality where their first success in public was made. Many years must pass away before the recollections connected with these time-honoured Rooms can be effaced. The premises may be converted into a club-house; but to all who love to haunt the spot where some of the brightest ornaments of musical art displayed their talents, and to recall the numerous incidents which occurred there, it will indeed be difficult to realise the fact that the familiar building at the corner is no longer the "Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover Square."

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CONCERTS.

THE unique experiment, which, since November 7, has been made in the Royal Albert Hall, may now be said to have furnished the data necessary for future guidance, and to have reached a stage where the term "experiment" hardly applies. It was necessarily begun under conditions purely speculative, because nothing of the kind had ever been attempted before. The directors, whom some have blamed for imprudence, and others praised for boldness, had to advance over the boundary of an unexplored region, with nothing more certain to guide them than that by no means infallible process called arguing the unknown from the known. Several things were necessarily assumed in order to make a start at all with the slightest hope of success. Thus, it was assumed that the public would go to the Albert Hall in sufficient numbers, tempted by a weekly programme arranged to please all tastes from the most refined to the most "popular." It was anticipated, further, that they would do this with a promptitude great enough to warrant a hope of ultimate success before the sacrifice, inevitable at the outset, had become too great. And it was further expected that the carefully disposed artistic resources at command would prove equal to the enormous strain of daily concerts. But an assumption, however strong, has yet to bear the test of experience, and if any of those just named have failed to pass the ordeal, the directors, though they may regret the fact, cannot reproach themselves. The scheme of the Albert Hall Concerts was a grand one, worthy of this musical age, and was worked with a faithfulness and devotion that from the first placed the result, no matter how disastrous, in the category of misfortunes which have nothing to do with faults. Safe on this score, the directors need not fear to confess that, while the experience of seven weeks has shown their enterprise, as a whole, to be founded upon an estimate of facts that erred only in being too sanguine, the results, as a whole, point emphatically to the need of material change. They cannot refuse to believe that, even under present arrangements, the scheme would become self-supporting in process of time, for it has always been observed that enterprises of such "pith and moment" are sure to create their own public. But the vastness of the undertaking makes the process of working up to this result one of very serious responsibility—such responsibility, in point of fact, as should only be incurred by a public organisation, or with a guarantee of State aid. Nor is this the only consequence of the seven weeks' teaching. The directors have now become thoroughly acquainted with the exigencies of the vast building in which their concerts are given, and with the limit within which the resources it exacts can be worked with the best results. The highest wisdom is shown in profiting by experience, and the directors of the Albert Hall Concerts do no more than justice to themselves and to their enterprise by frankly making the changes which seem to them necessary. What those changes are has now to be succinctly told.

In the first place, the number of concerts per week will be reduced from six to two, and, as a matter of course, the opportunities for careful preparation thus afforded will be used to their utmost extent.

Secondly, it is the intention of the directors to increase the number both of band and chorus, bringing each up to the strength necessary for the best effects attainable in the huge area devoted to the performances. The wisdom of this course needs no demonstration.

Thirdly, it is proposed to cover the same ground as that occupied by the series of concerts now ended, doing so by the following arrangement. One concert in each week will be devoted to the popular music hitherto presented on Monday and Saturday evenings, special care being taken that the term "popular" shall have a liberal signification as regards good and improving works. One concert in each alternate week will be devoted to oratorio, given up to the present on Thursday evenings, and one to the orchestral music which, under the daily scheme, supplied programmes for Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday. With regard to oratorio, it need only be said that the great standard works will be presented under materially improved conditions and with the utmost possible completeness. With reference to the orchestral music, the directors while paying requisite attention to the claims of classical works, will not neglect those of modern writers, whether English or foreign. The liberality and comprehensiveness which have hitherto marked their operations will continue to do so; and no pains will be spared whenever new aspirants for favour are introduced to public notice. The personnel of the enterprise will remain unchanged as regards the principal artists, save that fresh and important engagements are contemplated, and here the directors have much pleasure in announcing that the eminent violinist, Herr Wilhelmj, will make an early début at the Royal Albert Hall, after several years' absence from England. Other distinguished artists will follow him, and it is believed that the magnitude and completeness of the performances cannot fail to secure the warm sympathy and support of the musical public.

There only remains to add, that the concerts will be resumed on January 19th, and continue until Easter.

MEDELSSOHN's father has been heard to say that in his intercourse with the world he was constantly reminded of his own comparative unimportance by allusions to his being the son of one great man, and the father of another. For a private individual such a position might be somewhat unsatisfactory; but how much more so it must be to one before the public may be gathered from the fact of Mdle. Carlotta Patti refusing to sing at a recent concert in Birmingham because she had been announced as "the sister of Adelina Patti." Looking at this matter only from a commercial point of view, we cannot acquit Messrs. Harrison (who were, we believe, responsible for the advertisement) of all blame; for if the vocalist were a mere pretender, they would have no right to force her upon the Birmingham public because she was the "sister of Adelina Patti," and if her fame had been already firmly established, there could be no occasion for any such adventitious aid. Artistically, there can be but one opinion upon her conduct under the circumstances; and we heartily congratulate Mdle. Patti upon resolutely maintaining the dignity of a profession the refined and elevating tendency of which is too apt occasionally to be forgotten.

MR. FREDERICK H. LEMARE, who writes to us respecting the notice on the Brixton Choral Society's concert in our last number, is at perfect liberty to believe that the "gas and heat of the room" caused the instruments to be out of tune, and also that no choruses are "ever better or so well rendered by such small Societies as by that at Brixton;" but in allowing him the luxury of his own opinion, we claim the same privilege for ourselves. Meanwhile we cannot but regret that the "35 years' experience," which our correspondent boasts of, should have been so exclusively devoted to pianoforte tuning and organ regulating as to prevent his understanding how to express himself in sufficiently courteous terms to ensure the insertion of his letter. A small amount of reflection will, we hope, convince him that to accuse a critic who openly gives his opinion on the concert of the Society, of dealing a "back-handed slap" at its management, is scarcely a judicious method of serving his own cause, more especially as, bearing the surname of the Conductor, the public might perhaps consider him as a slightly biassed witness.

ENGLISH MUSIC AT THE ALBERT HALL.

(From the "Musical World," Dec. 12.)

WHATEVER treats the concerts of classical and modern German music at the Crystal Palace, at the Monday Popular Concerts, and on Wednesdays and Fridays at the Albert Hall, give us, it is most gratifying to us, and to every English hearer, when opportunities are afforded, to appreciate also the talent of our own native composers. This is not the occasion to discuss how far Germans, Italians and Frenchmen are right or wrong in saying that we are an unmusical nation. Surely the proudest German, who may have been at the Albert Hall last Tuesday, will have applauded the specimens of English orchestra writing as heartily as ever at a concert of modern German music. Space does not permit us to speak of every interesting piece performed, but we cannot pass without a few words on the three great works of the evening; namely, Sir Sterndale Bennett's overture, "Paradise and the Peri," Mr. G. Macfarren's "Festival Overture," and Mr. Ebenezer Prout's Organ Concerto. The overture, or rather overture quasi-fantasia, from the pen of one of the greatest musicians of our age, abounds in charming, simple, and yet noble melodies, and shows in the orchestral writing the powers of a distinguished musician. Like Sir Sterndale Bennett, Mr. Macfarren is recognised and generally known as one of our most excellent musicians, and so we need not add any to the great amount of praise his overture has found. In Mr. Ebenezer Prout, however, we find a comparatively young musician, who, not having much time to devote to composition, does not often come forward with a new work, and so he has not yet afforded sufficient opportunity to the bulk of amateurs and musicians of getting well acquainted with his great talents—which means as much as appreciating them. The concerto for the organ which we heard last Tuesday, shows not only the author's great powers of invention, but also his most thorough knowledge of the contrapuntal and fugal writing, and of the treatment of his solo instrument. The opening Allegro of the concerto is an interesting and well-worked out movement, winding up with a very brilliant yet dignified Cadenza. Great as the thematic charms of the first movement are, they are still surpassed in the highly melodious Adagio, which follows the Allegro. The themes are of such absolute beauty, that Mendelssohn himself might have written them; whilst of the fugal treatment of Luther's Chorale in the final Allegro breve, not even the greatest masters of the fugue, Bach and Handel, need be ashamed. Dr. John Stainer played the concerto to perfection, and the only reproach to be made to him is that he did not comply with the general redemand accorded to Mr. Prout's concerto. The directors of the Albert Hall Concerts, we are informed, intend also to produce the Symphony of the same author, which was so well received last spring at the Crystal Palace. We learn from one of our friends that Mr. Prout said, "I have an overture in my head, but cannot find time to shake it out on paper." Let us hope that this overture will not remain unwritten, and that we shall very soon have an opportunity of hearing it. So long as we have such musicians, England need not hide her face before other nations.

SIGMUND MENKES.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

HANDEL's "L'Allegro ed il Penseroso" (which latter work most of our contemporaries will insist upon calling "Il Penseroso,") was given on the 28th November, the principal parts being sung by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Spiller, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Whitney. The composition was on the whole well rendered, the organ part, in Dr. Stainer's hands, being an important feature in the performance. In memory of the death of Mozart, on the 5th ult., the programme was largely selected from his works, and included the "Jupiter Symphony," and the Violin Concerto in D (given for the first time at these concerts), which was finely played by M. Sainton and warmly applauded. At the last concert before Christmas (on the 19th ult.) Sir F. A. G. Ouseley's Oratorio "Hagar" was performed, the solo vocalists being Madame Otto-Alvsleben, Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Emily Spiller, Madame Patey, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Dudley Thomas, Mr. Howells, and Mr. J. G. Patey. We expressed our opinion upon this Oratorio so fully when it was given at the last Hereford Festival that it is unnecessary now to discuss its merits. It was well rendered, especially in the solo parts; and was listened to with that attention which the work of so scholarly a musician should command.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CONCERTS.

IN spite of the attractions announced at these concerts on the evenings devoted to the higher class of music, there can be no doubt that what may be termed the "People's nights" have drawn together by far the largest numbers. The "Irish," "Welsh," and even "English" Evenings have made a powerful appeal to the sympathies of those who love national music for its own sake, and the names of Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, the new soprano, Mdle. Levier, Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Patey, Miss Sterling, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Whitney, and many other artists of established reputation, offered a sufficient guarantee that the vocal music would be done ample justice to. "Israel in Egypt" and Bach's St. Matthew "Passion Music" (in which Mdle. Levier, who sang the soprano part, more than confirmed her former success) have shown the powers of the choir to much advantage. Mention must be made of the performance of Dr. Hans von Bülow, Mr. C. Hallé, Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Miss May, Miss Emma Barnett (who played her brother's clever Concerto), Mr. Walter Bache and Mr. J. F. Barnett, all of whom have thoroughly supported their reputation as exponents of the highest style of classical music. On one of the "English" nights Sir Sterndale Bennett's Overture "Paradise and the Peri," Mr. G. A. Macfarren's "Festival Overture" and Mr. Prout's Organ Concerto (Dr. Stainer being the exponent of the Organ part) were conspicuous features in the programme, and elicited the warmest applause. It would be impossible to name one half of the various compositions performed during the month; but we may say that the scheme at first announced has been conscientiously carried out. Mr. Barnby and the talented conductors who occasionally replace him, are fully deserving of the highest praise for their energy and good will in the cause.

THE concert given by the Royal Academy of Music on the 19th ult., at the Hanover Square Rooms, attracted a large number, not only of the patrons and friends of the Institution, but of the general public; for, apart from the fact of an excellent orchestra, choir, and solo vocalists, and instrumentalists appearing on the occasion, the circumstance of its being the last performance ever to be given in these Rooms, was in the highest degree interesting. Under the able direction of Mr. Walter Macfarren, an excellent selection was performed, so well indeed that in the execution of many of the pieces, the audience almost forgot the fact of its being a concert of students. The pianists—Miss Alice Curtis, Miss Conolly, Miss Katie Steel, Miss Bucknall and Mr. Walter Fitton—especially distinguished themselves; and Mdle. Gabrielle Vaillant in Beethoven's Romance in F, for the Violin, was most enthusiastically received. Mr. G. A. Macfarren's Cantata "Christmas," was rendered throughout with much care and precision, the principal parts being admirably given by Miss Jessie Jones and Miss Barkley. The composer was loudly called for at the conclusion of the Cantata, and bowed from the Royal box. Praise must also be given to the other vocalists—Misses Marie Duval, Reimar, Bolingbroke and Nessie Goode, Messrs. Henry Guy and Ap Herbert—Miss Jessie Jones creating a marked effect in "Hear ye, Israel," from "Elijah." The concert concluded with the National Anthem. Sir Sterndale Bennett, Principal of the Academy, and many professors and former students of the Institution were present.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The examination for the Westmorland Scholarship and Potter Exhibition took place on Monday the 21st ult., the examiners being the Principal (Sir Sterndale Bennett), Mr. F. R. Cox, Signor M. Garcia, Mr. H. C. Lunn, and Mr. G. A. Macfarren. The results were as follows:—Westmorland Scholarship, Miss Charlotte Agnes Larkcom, elected; Potter Exhibition, Miss Alice Mary Curtis, elected.

MISS GRACE LINDO gave a highly successful concert at the Beethoven Rooms, Harley Street, on the 15th ult. The programme was carefully drawn out, and the entire performance gave the greatest satisfaction. Miss Lindo sang the recitative and aria, "Non più di fiori" (with the unrivalled clarinet obbligato of Mr. Lazarus), Adolphe Adam's "Cantique de Noël," Dr. C. G. Verinder's new ballad, "The tale he told me," and Lachner's lied "Waldvoglein" (violoncello obbligato, Herr Schubert). Miss Julia Sydney, Madame Elwood Andrea, Messrs. Noble, Belmont, Le Messurier, Dexter, and Trelawney Cobham rendered valuable service in the vocal selections, and Miss Josephine Lawrence, Mr. Pearce, Herr Schubert, Mr. Lazarus, and Herr Oberthür contributed instrumental pieces. The vocal music was accompanied by Dr. Verinder.

A MUSICAL performance was given by the pupils of the London Society for Teaching the Blind to Read on the 4th ult., at the Institution, Upper Avenue Road, Regent's Park. The first part included a selection from the "Messiah," and the second part was miscellaneous. Under the able direction of Mr. Edwin Barnes, Professor of music at the Society's School, the whole of the choral pieces were excellently rendered; and the solos, both vocal and instrumental, were worthy of much praise. The Chair was occupied by F. Peterson Ward, Esq.

THE Crouch End Choral Society gave its first concert in the Drill Hall on Thursday the 17th ult., when the "Messiah" was performed, under the conductorship of Mr. A. J. Dye. The choruses were well sustained by the members of the Society, and the solos were effectively rendered by Mrs. Alfred Dye, Miss Lydia Elmore, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. A. G. Lawson. The accompaniments were played by Mr. J. Locke Gray at the pianoforte, and Mr. Buttery at the harmonium.

HANDEL'S "Messiah" was given at the Downs Chapel, Hackney, on the 16th ult., Mr. E. J. Wallis being the conductor. Principal vocalists:—Madame Clara West, Miss Julia Derby, Mr. Stedman and Mr. J. L. Wadmore. Trumpet, Mr. Dearden; harmonium, Mr. Hainworth. The performance was very successful.

THE fourth concert of the Bible Office Choral Society, Shacklewell, was given on Tuesday evening the 15th ult., in the School-room of the Baptist Chapel, Dalston Lane. The programme was divided into two parts, sacred and secular; the first including "O Father, whose Almighty power" (Handel), "To Thee, great Lord" (Rossini), and solos by Miss and Mrs. Robinson; and the second "See the chariot at hand," "O who will o'er the downs so free" (the latter being redemanded), and several songs. Great praise is due to the conductor, Mr. Walter W. Robinson, who ably accompanied. Mr. Hulbert presided at the harmonium.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

Il Seraglio. An Opera, in Three Acts. Composed by W. A. Mozart. Edited by Berthold Tours. Translated into English by the Rev. J. Troutbeck.

Now that we have a popular edition of this charming Opera, there is every hope that the music may obtain that recognition in this country which its excessive merit entitles it to. That it was a great favourite with Mozart may be gathered from many of his letters. "The libretto," he says, in writing from Vienna on the 1st August, 1781, "is very good indeed; the subject Turkish, and the title

'Belmont und Konstanze, oder die Verführung aus dem Serail.' I intend to write the symphony, the chorus, in the first Act, and the final chorus with Turkish instrumentation;" and in another letter, speaking of the Overture, he says it is "quite short, with alternate pianos and fortes, the Turkish music always coming in at the fortes. It is modulated through different keys, and I think no one can well go to sleep over it, even if his previous night has been a sleepless one." A letter to his father, giving a detailed account of the Opera, proves that his heart was thoroughly in his work; and the many who will now doubtless become acquainted with the music for the first time cannot but wonder that for so many years it should have been known to only a limited portion of the public. In every respect the edition before us is thoroughly satisfactory. The translation, from the original German, is most faithful throughout, and the musical editorship reflects the utmost credit upon Mr. Berthold Tours, the indications of the score being, as usual, an important feature in the arrangement.

Scenes from Goethe's Faust. Composed for Solo Voices, Chorus and Orchestra, by Robert Schumann. The translation by Miss Louisa Vance.

THERE is every reason to believe that Schumann's health was seriously impaired when he conceived the idea of musically illustrating some of the most striking scenes from Goethe's poem; and yet there is no work which so thoroughly displays the force of his genius, and, more especially, of that dramatic power which, beautiful as are many of his important compositions for voices and orchestra, seemed occasionally forced beyond its natural strength. In "Faust" we have a faithful reflection, from a kindred mind, of the inner meaning of the poet's language; and we may point more particularly to the death scene of the hero as a remarkable instance of that musical colouring of which Wagner is so perfect a master. The scenes selected by Schumann were composed at various periods, extending over nearly six years, and the Overture was not written for three years afterwards. Now that the work is published in an octavo edition, uniform with the Operas issued by the same firm, there may be some hope of hearing a frequent public performance of music which, as we have already said, shows its composer at his best. Miss Vance's translation is remarkably good, the adaptability of the words to the notes having been throughout well studied. We may also mention as an interesting feature, that the second arrangement of the final chorus is given in an Appendix.

O Light everlasting. Sacred Cantata, composed by John Sebastian Bach. The English translation and adaptation by the Rev. John Troutbeck, M.A.

A VALUABLE and eminently interesting addition, this, to the choral works of the great master that have already come before us with an English version of the text, and in a cheap form. It is shorter by far than some of the Cantatas, and this renders it, if less desirable for concert use, much more available for church performance. Now that our great Cathedral Festivals have their existence jeopardized by the irreligious views—the term is used advisedly—of the Worcester Dean and Chapter, and the highest class of Sacred Music is in danger of exclusion from the sanctuary, or of admission only by piecemeal, in a garbled form and with inadequate means of performance, musicians and unprejudiced churchmen must welcome a class of works to which even Cathedral potentates can scarcely object, and which is of a nature to raise the standard of art and of worship. The first piece of the present Cantata is a Chorus which is less strikingly beautiful than many analogous movements by Bach, and which, with the directed repeat of the extensive First Part, after the intervening Second Part, is certainly long: it is, however, grand and joyful, and by no means without interest; a point of prominent effect in it being the long sustained note, sometimes by one and sometimes by another voice, during the motion of the rest of the parts. Then there is a tenor Recitative "Lord, in our inmost hearts," which curiously illustrates the vocal compass and perhaps the standard pitch of former days, by extending upwards to B natural, in a phrase needing no extraordinary force; and its descent to F proves that it cannot have been meant for what we now call an alto. Either, at the time when this was written, tenors must have had facility on the highest notes which is now unknown, or the pitch must then have been considerably lower than at present. No. 3 is an Air "Rejoice, ye souls," for what is defined as an alto, but what is understood in England as a mezzo-soprano voice. It is inexpressibly beautiful; the many shapes in which the opening phrase is presented have each a special charm, and they yet flow on continuously, making a whole of uniform loveliness, though of varied effect. This song is by no means inappropriate for separate performance. A brief Recitative for bass, "The Lord doth choose," leads to the final Chorus, which is of remarkable grandeur and brilliancy. It has a preludial Adagio; and this is followed by a quicker movement, beginning "Thank the Lord," wherein the full power of the master is displayed. In the choral writing of Bach, the value of florid counterpoint, as a means of energy and of breadth, is particularly exemplified. In the note-against-note harmony of other men, and in his own treatment of Choral Tunes, there is abundant fulness; but it is in independent part-writing, especially where the several voices imitate each other, that the utmost strength of a choir is proved, and it is in this that our author is pre-eminently successful. The Cantata before us is festive in character, and will suit any jubilant occasion.

"All they that trust in Thee, Lord." Composed for a Tenor Solo, Chorus and Orchestra, by Ferdinand Hiller.

HERE we have a reprint, in octavo form, of a work that has been, in a larger and costlier shape, for some ten or fifteen years before the English public. This edition testifies to the success of the composition, and to a call for its republication in a more portable shape than hitherto; which is to be regarded as a just tribute to an author whose name is acknowledged in all countries, and whose fame is founded on productions in nearly every class of music. It is a setting of the 125th Psalm, for the means described in the above title, and it comprises five numbers. Its style is essentially free—free as much with regard to modern rule as to those old-time laws which have but a limited application in the severest music of our day. The distinguished musician who writes seems to be insensitive to the ill effect of false relation, for he scatters sharps and naturals with total disregard to what part may have either; so it would be like blaming a Mahomedan for polygamy, to call him to account for what he doubtless deems virtuous, however uncongenial the practice may be to natures fostered in another creed. The contrast of fire and softness fastens the hearer's attention, there is much variety in the vocal distribution, and there are other qualities in the music to ensure its welcome. The first verse of the Psalm constitutes the opening number, which is for Chorus only; the male and female voices are happily contrasted in its early phrases, and as happily blended towards its end, and the energy, which is its main distinction, is sustained in the majestic motion of the instruments. No. 2, "Round Jerusalem," is a Recitative for the solo voice, the interludes, between the phrases of which, introduce the Chorus. The Air interspersed with passages for the Chorus, "Lord, do Thou well" is the most attractive piece in the work; the vocal melody is charming, the choral responses make a timely variety, and the figure of triplets for the violins, that is prominent but not permanent throughout, helps largely in the effect. Again the solo voice is brought side by side with the chorus in the fiery Allegro, "As for all those," and yet the vigorous violin passages, that peer through everything, carry the chief interest. This piece subsides into a sweet quietude at the words "But peace shall be upon Israel," and here we have some of the most delightful effects, if not the most winning strains of melody in all the Psalm, and the conclusion will certify a pleasant impression from the work. The occasional effective performance of this work at S. Andrew's Church, Wells Street, not to speak of other places, has proved its availability as an Anthem. It is then likely to fall sometimes into the hands of organists who are not competent to arrange for their instrument the present pianoforte arrangement from the score; and, for the sake of such, it is desirable that in the next re-issue, some modification of the part may be made so as to fit it to every capacity. The orchestral score is printed by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, in Leipzig, and will be found highly interesting by musicians.

The Morning and Evening Service, together with the Office for the Holy Communion (in E). Composed by Joseph Barnby.

This very comprehensive work includes, besides all that its title page states, also a setting of one of the alternative Canticles, Benedictus, and three of the Offertory Sentences, and it extends to the rare length of 65 pages. Except one new number, it has all appeared in print before in folio shape, and its re-issue, in a smaller and proportionably less costly edition, is a certain testimony to the success it has obtained and to the demand for copies. The style of the whole is distinctly modern—modern in respect to the character of the harmony and to the melodies of the upper part; modern in respect to the vocal distribution, comprising the frequent employment of all the voices in octaves and also their occasional division into an indefinite number of parts, the full and effective writing for the organ, and the frequent independence of this instrumental part from the vocal score.

Widely popular as the Service is, it will be but to remind many readers of what they already know, to enumerate its several pieces; but this shall be done concisely, because some folks may be pleased to be put in mind of what they like, and others cannot object to be told where to find what has won admiration. The Te Deum is set on a very large scale; it abounds in interesting points of expression, and the episode in A minor, beginning "Vouchsafe, O Lord," and changing to major at "O Lord, have mercy," will always be prominent among these. The Jubilate may be remembered by the passage for six voices, "For the Lord is gracious," and by the brilliant effect of the "Glory." The Communion Office is opened by an Introit, "O Father blest," which is, in brief, a Hymn to be sung by the juvenile and adult voices in octaves, that strongly tempts the congregation to participate in the performance, and this we surmise to be the composer's aim; the music is given twice for two verses with an addendum for an "Amen;" it is strikingly tuneful, and is harmonised with powerful simplicity. The Kyrie has a strongly plaintive expression, and in this it anticipates the opening of the Nunc dimittis, wherein the same quaint unisonous vocal phrase recurs, with the same imposing harmony for the organ. The Credo consists, for a great part of its extent, of a vocal unison of little interest, which is truly an accompaniment to the chief melody, and this is assigned to the organ. A different, and a far happier, distribution is made at "And was crucified;" where a solo treble has a very pathetic melody in B minor, the character of which is well sustained when the other voices enter in harmony on "He suffered." A good effect is presently made by the trebles and tenors singing in octaves to the harmony of the altos and basses, and after this to the conclusion, the voices have separate parts. In the three Offertory Sentences, there is the marked variety of difference of key from that in which all the other numbers are cast—the first, "Let Thy light" being in E flat, the second, "Whosoever hath this world's goods," for tenors and basses in unison without the upper voices, being in C minor, and the last, "Blessed is the man," being in E flat. This principle, of diversifying the tonality in the different numbers of a Service, is proposed by the Rev. Edward Young, in a preface to some compositions of his own, and it is well worthy the careful thought of musicians. The choice is questionable, however, of such remote keys from that of E natural, in which the rest of the Service stands, as those that are here employed—questionable, if the intention is to associate these pieces in any kind of unity with the rest of the work. In the Communion Office, where the musical numbers are less widely divided than in the Morning and Evening Services, the ear may be satiated with the constant use of the same key, and be pleasantly refreshed by an occasional variation, but, to give an air of connection and completeness to the series, it is, we opine, desirable that the several keys chosen should have a close affinity or common relationship. These Sentences are, in themselves, charming, and should tempt the most rigid ritualists to forego the Rubrick for the sake of admitting them into the celebration. In the Sanctus, the purport of the passage that introduces it is disregarded, in favour of the probable feeling of the communicants, making the words subjective instead of objective, and ignoring the heavenly multitude, in whose loud acclaim the singers profess to unite. The Gloria in Excelsis is set with care and good effect; but, from the words "For Thou only art holy" to the end, it is somewhat curt in comparison with the former portion of the hymn. The Magnificat is remarkable for the passage for solo voices, "He hath filled the hungry," for the digression into the key of C at the words "His mercy," and for the brilliant return to E, with the re-entry of the full chorus, at the "Glory," which, after the initial exclamation, is the same reading as at the conclusion of the Jubilate, but with a different development of the idea. We are mostly ready to perceive the pertinence of any after allusion, in the course of a Service, to any previously presented musical phrase; but we fail to recognize any likeness of sentiment between the beginning of Simeon's address and the Responses to the Commandments such as can justify the repetition in the Nunc dimittis of the same idea which has been heard in the earlier situation; this more proves our dulness, however, than a want of purpose in the composer. More obvious is the design in the appropriation of the Glory from the Jubilate, of which the hearers have been ingeniously reminded in the Magnificat, and which, recurring here, closes the Evening Service with the strains that dismiss them in the morning. It is with the Benedictus that our chief concern lies, since it is the one piece of the series that is now first given to the world. Of this, we must single out a movement for treble solo intermixed with chorus, beginning "Through the tender mercy," as being singularly attractive; the alternation of phrases for the one voice and the many, charmingly colours its effect; and the conclusion, where the rhythm is expanded and the chorus accompany the solo, is, without reserve, beautiful. It must be an oversight, where, on the words "hast visited," a third inversion of the chord of the 9th of F sharp, having E for the bass, is followed by a second inversion of a chord of B, having F sharp for the bass, and the top part proceeds in 4ths, A sharp, B, with the bass; and this, doubtless, the composer will correct when the piece is reprinted. The opening of the whole is grand in character. A change of measure, from $\frac{3}{4}$ to $\frac{2}{4}$, at the words "As He spake," introduces a more animated manner, which is enhanced by the imitative treatment of the phrase beginning "to perform the mercy;" few devices can better vivify choral music than this of making the several parts succeed each other in their entry on the same passage. A more declamatory movement begins at "And thou child," in which there is perhaps a redundancy of modulation. It is happily conceived to recur to the opening phrase, "Blessed be the Lord," at the commencement of the Glory, making glorification a renewal of the blessing; but the reflection is less perspicuous of the sense of the passage, "That we should be saved from the hands of our enemies," upon the words "As it was in the beginning." The musical interest of a long piece is augmented always by the return, at any period, to an idea previously announced; we expect, however, if such repetition take place on words other than the original, that there shall be some fitness in the sense of the one idea to that of the other. A vast number of hearers, and those especially who sympathise better with the style of our own time than that of our fathers, will be greatly pleased with this composition, and we foresee for it a wide and warm acceptance.

Softly the echoes come and go. Christmas Carol. The words from a Poem in a "London Society," with additional words by W. Hargreaves; for Solo voice, and harmonized for four voices, by William Hargreaves.

If such Carols as these are to form a portion of our observances of the present festive season, we cannot help

The musical score is arranged in five systems. The first system contains two staves: a vocal staff with lyrics and a piano staff. The second system also has two staves. The third system consists of three staves: two vocal staves and one piano staff. The fourth system continues with two vocal staves and one piano staff. The fifth system features a single grand staff (treble and bass clef) for the piano accompaniment.

feeling grateful that "Christmas comes but once a year." Not that we have anything to say against the melody, which goes well enough to the words, but the harmony seems like a rudimentary exercise which has not been submitted to the master. We give but a few of the errors, in confirmation of our remarks: page 2, 7th bar, three fifths in succession between bass and tenor—the first, happily, diminished; 13th bar, two leading notes rising to the key note, between alto and bass; 15th bar, dissonant note doubled. We may also say that whenever any difficulty occurs, the alto rises above the melody, the effect of which in performance would be at least peculiar. If Mr. Hargreaves feels that he can write tunes, he should take counsel with those who can harmonize them; for in published music, as in published literature, if we have no profound thought, we at least expect good grammar.

Two Bourrées, for Pianoforte. By Walter Macfarren.

WHATEVER may be the music of the future, there can be no question that a large portion of the compositions most popular amongst pianists of the present day is modelled upon those of the past. Not only has the Sonata form been revived with signal success by some of our best composers, but the old dances, the character of which was so marked as to inspire the genius even of John Sebastian Bach, have again been brought before us, full of that quaint antiquity which characterised these compositions in their own day, although the work of modern English writers. Amongst the number of authors who have given us specimens of this class of composition, we know of no one who has more thoroughly caught the true spirit of the dances than Mr. Walter Macfarren; and the two pieces before us will, we are certain, thoroughly establish this fact to the numerous Bourrée lovers who are sure to test it for themselves. No. 1, in C minor, has a most attractive leading subject, the harmonies of which have a flavour of the old style quite refreshing to ears satiated with modern chromatic chords. The introduction of the original theme in the tonic major, at the conclusion of the piece, has an excellent effect; and, after the three-part harmony, with the pedal bass, the progression in two parts for the final bars is thoroughly in character with the unaffected simplicity of the movement. No. 2 starts with a theme, in C major, so tuneful and vivacious as to arrest at once the attention of the most apathetic audience. Amongst the many points of interest in this opening subject we must mention the lengthening out of the melody, after the eighth bar, by an unexpected 6.4 on the key note, an effect which grows upon us by repetition. The theme in the tonic minor contrasts well in character with that at the commencement, and a spirited coda forms a fitting termination to the piece. If good music can push its way through the crowd, we predict a lasting popularity for these two Bourrées.

"Victoria Cross" March; for the Pianoforte. Composed by Alfred J. Elliott, R.A.M.

WHEN we say that Mr. Elliott has produced a well-considered and effective March, we perhaps accord him all the praise he anticipated, for the power of composing an original one is given but to few. The bold opening, the trio in the subdominant, with the intervening triplets in the accompaniment, and the conventional trumpet passages, may, as a rule, be cut out of one March and put into another without anybody discovering the joins. The composition before us, however, does the utmost credit to its author, for it is not only melodious but excellently harmonized; and the purity with which the parts are written should scarcely be passed over without due acknowledgment.

Caprice Impromptu; for the Pianoforte. By Horace Gee.

THIS piece commences with a short introduction announcing a melodious theme, accompanied by the two hands. The second subject, in the dominant, offers perhaps scarcely sufficient contrast; but a special character is given to it by the staccato bass, which afterwards flows in legato triplets. The return of the original melody, with a varied accompaniment, is effective; and if the Caprice should on the whole strike the listener as being too much of one colour, there can be no doubt that it is a thoroughly musician-like composition, and one which impresses us with the desire to renew our acquaintance with its author.

Over the Mountain-side. Four-part Serenade.

Composed by W. W. Pearson.

THE first of these compositions has an attractive theme, judiciously harmonized, the parts being distributed for the voices most effectively throughout. We especially admire the accentuation of the words, a feature carefully observed in the frequent responsive phrases which occur. A good choir would be certain to create a highly favourable impression with this graceful Serenade. The part-song has a soprano solo skilfully woven in with the chorus, the leading melody sympathetically expressing the feeling of the poetry. The instrumental accompaniment, having a cadenza before the introduction of the principal subject, is positively required to give due effect to the composition, but we presume that it could be sung without such aid.

Come gather round the Christmas Fire. Part-Song. Words by W. T. Hulland. Music by G. H. Gregory, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

THE words of this Song are thoroughly suggestive of merriment and good feeling; but lest we should, in forgetfulness of worldly cares, abandon ourselves too much to the happiness of the moment, Mr. Hulland reminds us that "another year may find us in the clay." Well, there are those who will have a skeleton at the feast; and we, who would keep these truths for more reflective moments, have of course no right to dictate to others. Mr. Gregory's music is bold, and thoroughly in sympathy with the subject. The part-writing is excellent throughout; and the composition may with confidence be recommended to all who cultivate choral music round the Christmas fire.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS.

Menuet de Bergame; pour Piano.

Air de Ballet; pour Piano.

Par Auguste Durand.

THESE three pieces have merits which deserve recognition, although even their composer may admit that they are not of a very high order. They are melodious, undisfigured by laboured attempts at a display of erudition, and well written for the instrument, qualifications which should strongly appeal to those amateurs who seek for music which shall tax neither mind nor fingers to any undue extent. The "Idylle" has a marked theme, with a continuous syncopated bass, the character of which is well preserved throughout. We are somewhat disappointed at not finding a subject which would form a better contrast when the song is taken with the left hand—the quaver accompaniment too much resembling that to the opening melody—but perhaps monotony was what the writer aimed at; and, if so, he has certainly succeeded. We much prefer the second piece, the leading subject of which is extremely pleasing. A good effect is gained by turning the key-note of D major into the third of the dominant seventh in E flat, and the return to the original theme and key is well managed. The "Menuet de Bergame" may be confidently recommended as a graceful trifle for drawing-room performance. No. 3 has a light and playful melody, a pedal bass being a prominent feature throughout. The passages are simple and lie well under the hand. It is probable that M. Durand may aim at a more exalted form of composition in the future; and, if so, we shall be glad again to meet with him.

C. JEFFERYS.

Les Etoiles Filantes; Réverie, pour le Piano.

Fleur de Mai; Valse Caprice, pour le Piano.

Rose and Blanche; Polka Caractéristique.

Par A. G. Gits.

THE placidity of the opening subject in the first of these pieces would certainly not call up the feeling suggested by its title, but the shooting up two octaves and back again—an effect which immediately follows—may perhaps be thought a sufficiently appropriate illustration of the leading idea. We cannot but think that a composer hampers himself most unnecessarily by naming a piece thus fantastically, for in nine cases out of ten it happens that he is more intent upon justifying the character of his composition than upon writing good music. The Réverie before us is somewhat conventional in construction—the melody, as a rule, being surrounded by those ornaments which have done duty in that capacity for so many years—but the passages are well written, and by no means difficult to play. The second piece has a graceful melody, with the usual theme modelled upon Weber's "Invitation to the Waltz," but there is a refinement about the treatment of the subjects highly creditable to the composer. Why it is called a "Valse Caprice," however, we are at a loss to understand. "Rose and Blanche" has much character, and is indeed in all respects a fairly good Polka. In so simple a piece, it is a question whether the grace-notes (compelling the stretch of a tenth) occurring in pages 2 and 3, might not frighten unambitious amateurs.

The Watchman. Song. Poetry by F. E. Weatherly. M.A. Music by J. P. Knight.

We approach the notice of this song with fear lest we should have got hold of the wrong edition, or that we should not agree with the publisher's estimate of Mr. Knight's works, for we read that the "only authorised edition" of one of this composer's ballads contains copyright additions and improvements, and that it is "illustrated with the author's portrait and extract from Assignment Deed." Another of the composer's pieces is said (not by a reviewer, but by the publisher) to be a "bold and dashing new song," so that on the whole Mr. Knight seems tolerably independent of criticism. "The Watchman," however, we may say has a vocal melody; and that the song, without being remarkably well accompanied, has a certain merit which will recommend it to amateurs.

Like a Summer Shower. Ballad. Poetry by Mary MacDermot. Music by Alfred Plumpton.

This ballad is said on the title-page to be "by the composer of the beautiful songs, 'Only to know,' and 'The Fountain,'" but by whom these pieces are so called is not stated. In the song before us Mr. Plumpton has written a flowing subject, with appropriately simple harmonies. It is scarcely fair to criticise a ballad merely intended for drawing-room singers and drawing-room listeners, but we should like the doubled dominant seventh, in the left hand part of the fourth bar of the symphony, to be taken out.

FREDERICK BRUCKMAN.

Gallery of German Composers. By Prof. Carl Jäger. With Biographical and Critical Notices by Edward F. Rimbault, LL.D.

This volume of Portraits may be conscientiously recommended as a most valuable gift-book to those who, having made acquaintance with the great German composers through their works, are anxious to look on the features and expression of men who have bequeathed such inestimable legacies to the world. Bach, Handel, Gluck, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Weber, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Meyerbeer and Wagner are the twelve artists chosen for illustration, the portraits having been carefully executed from oil paintings by Professor Jäger, and photographed in the first style of the art. The biographical and critical notices, which have been supplied by Dr. Rimbault, although short, afford every necessary information, one advantage being that, unlike many such biographies which have come before us, the facts may be relied upon. A small, but well designed wood-cut forms the head-piece of each notice; and the gorgeous binding of the volume will make it—apart from the richness of its contents—a most attractive book for the drawing-room table. Such a work as this should be warmly welcomed by art lovers in this country, for in many a household it might happen that a knowledge of the great German musical compositions could be dated from a contemplation of this life-like Gallery of Portraits.

RELFE BROTHERS.

The Child's First Step to the Pianoforte; in a series of Educated Progressive Lessons; forming a Complete and Easy Introduction to the Science of Music. By Miss Salmon.

"THIS Catechism," says its author, "has been prepared for the use of little people, with the view of simplifying to them the acquisition of the first principles of music, and of lessening those difficulties of lines and spaces, majors and minors, which cause so much perplexity and so many tears." Let us see how this laudable intention is carried out, by thinking, as much as possible, with the mind of the "little people" for whom the book is written. After naming the notes in the staff, we come to leger lines; and here we are told that A in alt. is written with a "little line running through the note, as if on the line," and that "it is called A above the line." They are all, it is said, to be "read as lines and spaces: thus: G, first space above the line—A, first line above the line—B, second space above the line—C, second line above the line," &c. Of course, we know that "above the line" signifies above the staff, but can a child translate "second line above the line" so as to get at its real meaning? Further on, after saying that musicians call the distances in music "intervals" and the sounds "tones," it is explained that "a semitone is the interval between one note and the next, whatever it may be;" and that "the interval between F and G is a whole tone." Surely here is inextricable confusion. We pass over the usual (and as we conceive utterly false) assertion that Compound Common Time is "two bars of Simple Triple Time in one," because we have so often in these pages expressed our views upon this subject; but if we accept the explanation that "Simple Triple Time is an arrangement of three notes, or sets of three," of course both 12·8 and 6·8 must be Simple Triple Time, for certainly each bar contains an "arrangement of sets of three." In Chapter 19, in reply to a question as to the use of a small note before one of the usual size, it is said that "The small note is played very quickly, and gives greater effect to the note following it," and immediately afterwards we are told that it generally takes "half the time of the note following." The confounding of the Appoggiatura with the Acciacatura is of course nothing new; but two explanations like these, which contradict each other, we have never before met with. In Chapter 21, we read that Staccato means that "the notes are to be separated from each other in a light and pointed manner," and then that the dots with the slur indicate that "the notes are to be played more like legato style, only, slightly staccato." This confusion arises from the general misapprehension of the word Staccato, which merely signifies that the notes are not to be joined, the degree of lightness or heaviness with which they are to be played being entirely determined by the signs placed over them. The agreeable task of recording our conviction of the earnestness with which this little Catechism is written we have left to the last, on the principle that duty must precede pleasure. There is much—very much—to admire in the method which is adopted—where the author is on safe ground—of wording the explanations so as to fit them to the capacity of a young child; and if Miss Salmon receive our strictures in the spirit with which they are written, she will re-consider the portions of her book upon which we have commented, in a second edition, and justify us in pronouncing it that "Complete and Easy Introduction to the Science of Music," which it is her evident desire that it should be.

A. BERTINI, SEYMOUR AND CO.

Christmas Cantata. Words by Sir Walter Scott. The Music composed expressly for the Choir of Christ's Hospital, by Arthur Fox.

PROBABLY because the composer of this Cantata has not aimed too high, he has fairly succeeded in his attempt. As a composition well adapted to the festive season for which it is designed, and thoroughly within the reach of amateur vocalists, it may be conscientiously recommended; and this is more than we can say of two-thirds of the Cantatas which come before us. The opening chorus, in C minor, has a well-marked subject, and contains many good points, amongst which may be mentioned the change into the relative major for the Soprano solo, which continues throughout the following choral movement, the repetition of the chorus, commenced by the basses, in the original key, and the change to the tonic major. The sequence of chords at page 19 is certainly somewhat trite, but it is effective; and it must be recollected that the lengthening out of a chorus, after you have said all that you have got to say, is always a dangerous point for young composers. The following Trio is somewhat feeble; but we like the Soprano song, "The damsel donn'd her kirtle sheen," which has a pleasing melody, if not very original. We cannot, however, reconcile ourselves to the long-holding note on the 6.4, before the return to the subject. "Mistletoe" is hardly a very musical word in its entire state; but when it is split into three parts, and the last syllable—"toe"—kept on for two bars and a half, the effect can scarcely be particularly satisfactory. The duet, "All hailed, with uncontrolled delight," is simplicity itself, both in the melody and harmony; but two singers who can sympathise with each other may make it tell with listeners who are satisfied with a two-part song, with occasional conversational passages. The final chorus, commencing with a soprano recitative, has a bold theme, sparsely harmonised, but well adapted to express the words. The Coda is brilliant, but, as in the first chorus, somewhat weak in treatment. The proofs of this work ought to be more carefully read, should it reach a second edition: we could point to many inaccuracies, but content ourselves with referring to page 24, where, in the last line of the accompaniment, both the treble and bass clefs are omitted.

LONGLEY-MOON—PENTNEY.

Te Deum Laudamus. Composed by the Rev. Theodore Carrier.

THE utmost consideration for one whose fondness for music is perhaps greater than his knowledge of the subject, and whose familiarity with the Daily Service tempts him to seek for musical utterance of the text, leaves it still impossible to ignore the incompetence of the present author to composition of any kind. It would be tedious for general readers, to name the grammatical improprieties that mark the writing, and it would be giving a lesson to the author which he would far better receive in private. He knows not even how to correct the press for his own production, since he gives a list of Errata, which is so numerous as to amount to seven in the space of but two pages. Though unskilled in music, a gentleman and a scholar should surely know enough of English to prevent his writing such false accents as here abound—the third syllable of "acknowledge" being set to the highest and strongest note of the three, and the first word of "to be the Lord" having a still more forcible emphasis, for instance. Not to extend the mention of faults of which the writer cannot know the evil, we must own our sadness to find the sacred Cantic and the holy art of music so desecrated as in the case under notice, and by one whose profession should teach him reverence for both.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

HARMONY PRIZE OF THE CHURCH CHORAL SOCIETY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Will you allow me a short space to correct a misunderstanding which has arisen in the minds of many of your readers in reference to the recent Michaelmas examination of the Church Choral Society, a notice of which appeared in your November number. After giving the names of the successful candidates, Mr. Corbett, Mus. Bac., Cantab., and myself amongst them, there is the following sentence:—"The harmony prize was not awarded, the necessary standard not being reached by the candidates." Allow me to state that graduates in music have no harmony exercises to do in any of the examinations held by this Society, so that we had no chance of competing for the harmony prize.

Yours truly,

FREDERICK ILIFFE,

Mus. Bac., Oxon.

MUSICAL SETTINGS OF THE TE DEUM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—May I be permitted to say a few words more about the above subject. It is quite true, as your correspondent writes, that there is nothing in the nature of a Creed before the 10th verse, but nevertheless the first ten verses form a section of the hymn in which the Unity and Trinity of the Divine Nature are celebrated in the name of the whole church. At verse 14, the subject is changed, as the Hymn addresses Christ, and speaks of His Divinity, Incarnation, Sacrifice, Ascension, and Session on high. The 19th verse stands, in a way, by itself. Certainly it is no prayer, still less is it praise, but a solemn expression of our belief in the second Advent as an introduction to a prayer. Since writing my former letter, I have been informed that the above division, given in the "Annotated Prayer Book," was first suggested by the late Mr. Keble.

May I assure Mr. Thompson that the Latin original for "cry" and "cry out" is "inaccessibili voce proclamant," and that in Isa. vi. 3, the Hebrew word (Kara') means "to cry out," or "shout." Moreover we are told at verse 4 that the posts of the door vibrated with the Angel's voice. Do not all these things point to ff rather than pp: as the right way of rendering verse 5 of the Te Deum? That this view was taken by the compilers of our Prayer Book is clear from their translation.

Perhaps, however, this verse may be made still more expressive if sung f, and crescendo, ff commencing with "Lord." Who can doubt the rendering of "King of kings," etc., in the "Hallelujah chorus," and this is an analogous case.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

W. J. LÖWENBERG.

THE MOVEABLE-DO MADE VISIBLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—In a recent paper read before the Musical Association, Mr. Sedley Taylor demonstrated, with much ability, the shortcomings of the notation of music in ordinary use, and suggested in place of it an ingenious modification in which, by means of a system of wavy lines drawn along the line or space of the staff occupied by the tonic, that note is kept prominently before the eye and the number of accidentals is reduced. Of the merits of Mr. Taylor's plan the public will shortly be able to judge for themselves, as I understand, the paper is being published in a contemporary journal. The numerous other attempts which have from time to time been made in the same direction are based on the assumption that, so far at least as the singer is concerned, the ordinary notation fails to show in a direct manner that which it is virtually necessary that he should know, viz., the position on the staff of the tonic in every change of key. These plans may be conveniently divided into two classes: 1, those which lay aside the ordinary staff; and 2, those which retain it. Among the former may be mentioned the Tonic Solfa and the Chev  notations, Mr. Lunn's Sequential System, and my Tonic Staff Notation. Of those plans which retain the staff of five lines perhaps the best, because the simplest, is that of Mr. Young, in which the place of the tonic is indicated by a dotted line, or if that note occupies a space, by two dotted lines. Its defect is that no distinction is made between the notation of the major and of the minor scale. The same defect is observable in Mr. Lang's "Union" Notation, in Mons. Jeu de Berneval's Monogamic System, in the late Mr. Waite's Figure Notation, in Mr. Bell's Star Sol-fa Notation, as well as in most of the notations comprised in the first class. I may perhaps be allowed to refer here to a plan of my own in which the bars (i.e. the vertical lines commonly so called) serve not only as boundaries between one measure and another, but as guide posts showing the place of the key note. Each bar throughout the piece carries an indicator (preferably a small open square) which stands on the degree of the staff occupied by the tonic and rises or falls with every change of key. In minor keys the tonic is distinguished by an indicator of some other form (preferably by an open square with a dot in its centre). The advantage of my system, apart from its simplicity, are these:—1, it is free from ambiguity as regards major or minor keys; 2, it involves no difficulties of a typographical nature; 3, it does not displace any portion of the existing notation; and 4 it is applicable to any system of Solmization.

I am, Sir, Your obedient servant,
W. H. GILL.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

E. D. PALMER.—We adhere to our already expressed opinion upon the progression named, but cannot criticise the criticism of any of our contemporaries.

VERTUMNUS.—Our correspondent, who asks us to give a "progression of chords (written out on the staff), and state when and how far the rule against consecutive 5ths may be broken with safety," must have strange ideas of the duties of an Editor.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

ALFORD.—The annual concert given by Mr. H. Brown, the esteemed organist, took place at the Corn Exchange on the 22nd ult., and was extremely successful. The vocalists were Miss Jessie Giles and Mr. Stedman; Violin, Herr Rosenthal; Violoncello, Mons. Albert—all of whom were encored during the evening. Miss Jennie Brown, a promising pupil of Mr. Walter Macfarren, was the pianist, and showed by her careful rendering of Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor, and the "Spinning Song" of her talented instructor, that she possesses qualifications for a good artist; this young lady was also vociferously encored for her performance of the Rondo brilliant "La Gaité" (Weber). Herr Lehmeier conducted.

BRIDGETOWN.—On the occasion of the opening of the new organ in Bridgetown Church on the 7th ult., Mr. Graham Clarke, organist of St. Andrew's, Plymouth, gave a Recital. The programme was a very excellent one, the pieces being selected from the works of the great masters, and fully calculated to display the capabilities of the instrument and the artistic ability of the organist. The organ was built by Mr. Speechly, of London.

CAMBRIDGE.—On Tuesday evening, the 1st ult., Mr. Charles Hallé and Madame Norman-Neruda gave a pianoforte and violin Recital at the Guildhall, under the auspices of Mr. James C. Daniel, the well-known entrepreneur of Clifton; the local arrangements being entrusted to the hands of Messrs. Ling and Sons. The audience was large and fashionable, and the whole performance gave the greatest satisfaction.

CLIFTON.—On Saturday, the 13th ult., Mr. Charles Hallé and Madame Norman-Neruda gave a pianoforte and violin Recital at the Victoria Rooms, forming one of the series of Clifton Winter Entertainments organised by Mr. James C. Daniel. The programme included selections from Beethoven, Rust, Heller, Ernst, Chopin, Liszt, Vieuxtemps, Brahms, Joachim, and Schumann. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, there was a large audience. The two artists played in their usually excellent manner, although Madame Neruda was, we regret to hear, suffering from severe indisposition, and was obliged to sit down during a portion of the performance.

COLNBROOK, NEAR WINDSOR.—An entertainment was given on Tuesday evening, the 8th ult., consisting of readings and vocal and instrumental music, for the benefit of the Boys' National School. The Rev. Charles Grinstead occupied the chair. Readings were given by James Watson, Esq., of Langley House, Slough; and songs, duets, and pianoforte pieces were contributed by Misses Watson, Tollit, and Denyer, Mr. Wooton, Mr. Ratcliff, and the members of the Colnbrook Glee Club. Mr. R. Ratcliff conducted. The performance was a decided success.

CROSSHILLS.—Mr. E. Parkinson gave a very successful concert in the New Town Hall, on Saturday, the 12th ult. The artists engaged were Miss E. Arthur, of the Leeds Town Hall Concerts, Mr. Nunns, of the Leeds Harmonic Union, and Mdlle. Brousil, the celebrated Bohemian violinist. Miss Arthur's singing called forth repeated plaudits, and Mr. Nunns made a most favourable impression. The glees, quartets, and trios were given with good taste and finish, especially "When evening's twilight." Mdlle. Brousil was highly successful in her violin solos. Mr. Wilson was a very able accompanist.

CROYDON.—The annual concerts given by the Whitgift School-boys took place on Wednesday and Friday evenings, the 16th and 18th ult., when Mr. Cummings's Fairy Ring was performed, and a selection of part-songs, &c. The band was efficient, and played the rather difficult accompaniments to the Cantata in excellent style. At the conclusion of the concert, R. A. Heath, Esq., one of the governors of this admirable institution, made a very effective speech on the advantages of giving boys a knowledge of music, and highly complimented Mr. Griffiths on the state of efficiency to which he had brought the boys. A magnificent testimonial (the gift of Mr. Heath) was then presented to Mr. Griffiths, consisting of a silver-gilt inkstand, manufactured by Messrs. Elkington, with a suitable inscription on a gold scroll, supported by two figures of boys holding trumpets, and valued at about forty-five guineas. Mr. Griffiths was much affected by the unexpected honour, and returned thanks in a suitable speech. Mr. Hullah was present at the concert on Friday.

DEVIZES.—The Amateur Choral Society gave a performance of Christmas Carols and a miscellaneous selection on Monday, the 14th ult., under the direction of Mr. J. T. Abraham. The most admired pieces were Baumer's part-song, "The chimes of Oberwesel," with bells obligato, Pinsuti's "And so shall I," Roedel's "Sweet Lisette," "The Wave" duet (Guglielmo), "Scenes that are brightest," from Martiana, and a chorus from Flotow's Maria. The great attraction of the evening was the pianoforte playing of Mr. Bambridge, the organist of Marlborough College. His performance of the finale from Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata, and "Norwegian Melodies" (W. S. Bambridge) created a perfect furore amongst the large audience filling the Town Hall. Mr. Sly and Mr. W. Price accompanied.

DEVONPORT.—A concert was given at the Mechanics' Institute on Wednesday evening, the 9th ult., by Mr. W. H. Hannaford, organist of St. John's. The orchestra was composed of a band and chorus numbering between sixty and seventy performers. The pieces forming the principal features of the programme were, Birch's pastoral Operetta, Robin Hood, and Mendelssohn's Motett, "Hear my prayer." Mr. W. H. Hannaford conducted; Mr. W. W. Brown presided at the pianoforte and Mr. C. Clemens at the harmonium. Miss Triggs (soprano) sustained the part of Maid Marian. Mr. Donovan, Mr. Boulds, and Mr. Rendle were the other vocalists. Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," by Miss Triggs and chorus, was admirably rendered. A local favourite, Miss Snell, sang "O bid your faithful Ariel fly" with such effect as to enlist a hearty encore. The duo for pianoforte and harmonium, by Mr. and Master Hannaford, was encored, and at the close of the second performance Master Hannaford received the ovations of the whole house. A solo on the violin, by Mr. Pardew, and the chorus, "Let the hills resound," brought the evening's entertainment to a close.

DURHAM.—On the 22nd ult. Mr. J. C. Whitehead, late organist of St. Cuthbert's Church, and assistant organist of the Cathedral, and who has just been appointed organist of Bury Parish Church, was, together with the choir of St. Cuthbert's, entertained at dinner by the vicar, churchwardens, and congregation. After the dinner Mr. Whitehead was presented with a valuable testimonial, consisting of a gold watch and chain, a gold signet ring, and an inkstand.

EASTBOURNE.—On Monday, the 21st inst., Mr. J. H. Deane, the organist of Trinity Church, gave the last of a series of eight weekly concerts of classical music. He has been assisted by Mr. J. Taylor (organist of St. Saviour's, Eastbourne), his brother, Mr. Edward Deane, of the Crystal Palace and Philharmonic Orchestras, Miss Roper, Miss Headland, Herr Cramer, Herr Siebenheller, Messrs. Cooper, &c., instrumentalists; and Miss F. Douglas, the Misses Knight, and Mr. C. Roper, vocalists. Amongst other works, Haydn's Second Symphony, a portion of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, Septet, &c., have been performed. The songs have included Gounod's "Ave Maria," Handel's "Let me wander not unseen," "Revenge! Timotheus cries," "Honour and arms," &c.

EDINBURGH.—Sir Julius Benedict's St. Peter was performed on the 30th November, in the Edinburgh Music Hall, by the Choral Union. The vocalists were Mdlle. Enequist, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. Bentham, and Signor Agnesi. The tone of the chorus was generally good, the parts were well balanced, and the points of attack were caught up with precision and vigour, and, taking all in all, the choral singing was a credit to the Society, and to Mr. Adam Hamilton, its conductor. Mr. Carrodus and his well-disciplined followers were thoroughly efficient, and the accompaniments and incidental symphonies were splendidly played. Miss Severn produced a marked impression in "O, thou afflicted," which was sung with feeling and expression. Mdlle. Enequist gave "I mourn as a dove" with exquisite tenderness. Mr. Bentham sang the tenor solos, and Mr. Wadmore, who took his part at short notice, sang with great feeling "O that my head were waters."—PROFESSOR OAKLEY gave an organ performance on the 20th ult., in the University Music Classroom, in presence of a crowded audience, including a large number of students. Improvements have been made in the arrangements of the classroom, so as to exhibit to greater advantage the new front of the organ, composed of the new 32-feet double diapason pedal stop. An excellent programme was provided, and the obvious attention of the audience, and the applause at the end of most of the numbers, seemed to indicate a thorough appreciation of the Professor's very finished playing. The orchestral colouring of the Manfred entr'acte (Reinecke) was well brought out.

GATESHEAD.—The organ built by Lewis of London, for St. Cuthbert's, Bensham, was opened on Sunday, the 20th ult., by Mr. Charles H. Shepherd, A.R.A. The instrument, though not a large one, is well adapted for the church. Mr. Shepherd displayed much taste in the selection of pieces, and the facility with which he proved the capabilities of the instrument gave general satisfaction. The singing of the choir, under the leadership of Mr. Dobson, was excellent.

HAGGERSTON.—The Third Quarterly Musical Service on behalf of the Choir Fund was held at St. Mary's, on Wednesday the 25th November, when a selection from Handel's Samson was efficiently rendered by the choir, and Mr. W. H. Coventry played a variety of organ solos in a masterly style. On Thursday the 10th ult. the gentlemen of the choir were entertained at supper by the choir-master at his residence. A most delightful evening was passed, which greatly tended to still further cement the esprit de corps by which this choir has been distinguished whilst under the able direction of Messrs. W. and J. Coventry.

HIGH WYCOMBE.—On Wednesday, the 9th ult., a concert of sacred music was given in the Town Hall, by the members of Union Chapel Church, assisted by several friends, under the conductorship of Mr. Aubrey Weston, organist and precentor of the chapel. The choruses were well rendered, perhaps the best being "The marvellous work," which gained marked applause. Miss Robinson was encored in "Charity," and Mr. Tottle in "The source of England's greatness." Miss Gilbert sang very effectively Sullivan's "Give." Miss E. Pepin and Miss Jane Easden also gained deserved applause for their solos. A Christmas carol, sung as a quartet without accompaniment, by Miss E. Pepin, Mrs. Weston, Mr. Weston, and Mr. Tottle, was encored. The hall was densely crowded in every part, and the proceeds (which were considerable) were devoted to the formation of a fund for the purchase of a new organ.

LEIGHTON BUZZARD.—On Saturday evening, the 28th November, Mr. R. Purrett (successor to the late J. Young) gave his annual concert to a fashionable and appreciative audience, in the Corn Exchange, which was filled. The artists engaged were Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Patey, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Patey. Mr. Charles Ewings presided at the piano, one of Messrs. Kirkman's boudoir grands. The soloists gave great satisfaction, and the concert was a decided success.

LIVERPOOL.—The eleventh subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society, which took place on the 1st ult., was a remarkably interesting one, the chief orchestral work being Joachim Raff's symphony "Leonore" (No. 5, in E. op. 77). The principal artists were Mdlle. Singelli, Madame Trebelli-Ettini, and Signor Campanini. The overtures were those to Struella (Plotow) and Der Freischütz (Weber), the concert closing with Gounod's march in the Reine de Saba. Signor Campanini won especial admiration from the more musical part of the audience by his splendid rendering of the solo "Da voi lontan," from Lohengrin (Wagner). The twelfth subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society, on the 22nd ult., was devoted to an interesting and spirited performance of Macfarren's fine Oratorio, St. John the Baptist. Principal artists—Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Enriquez, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Santley. In such hands, it is needless to say how well the solo portions of the work were interpreted. The lovely unaccompanied quartet, "Blessed are they," was, of course, encored.

MAIDSTONE.—Mr. Henniker's concert, on the 10th ult., was a great success. The principal artists were Miss Annie Banks, Miss Phillips, Mr. Orlando Christian, Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant (violin), and Mr. Henniker and Mr. Dutnall (pianoforte), with band and chorus of eighty voices. Miss Banks was encored in Balfe's "Beneath a portal," and a similar compliment was awarded to Mr. O. Christian in "Over the rolling sea." The great success of the evening was the violin solo, "Fantasia de Concert," by Mdlle. Vaillant, which was also encored. Mr. Henniker conducted.

MONMOUTH.—A concert was held in the large school-room of the Grammar School on Thursday the 10th ult. The programme was a long and varied one, and included selections from Mendelssohn, Hummel, Sullivan, Bishop, Leslie, and Gottschalk. The choir was under the guidance of Mr. Holt, who conducted the concert, and very ably played the accompaniments for most of the songs. His solos were "Pasquinade" (Gottschalk), and "Rondo Capriccio" (Mendelssohn). Masters R. Courteen and Chambers and Mr. B. S. Bisam sang with great care and feeling the songs entrusted to them. The glees were fairly sung, the best being "The belfry tower" (Hatton). Miss Peppercone in Kuhn's "Lover and the bird" (Transcription), and a Concerto of Mendelssohn's, was very successful. Ardit's "Beauty, sleep" was well sung by Miss Brookes. Miss Old (piano), Mr. Old (violin), and Captain Bayliff (violoncello), played two of Hummel's trios, which were well received. Mr. Polgreen gained a well-merited encore for a song by Leslie. Miss Williams and Miss Peppercone played a selection from Rigoletto arranged by Cunio. Mr. Rosenare was very successful in "The boys of merry England," the boys joining in the chorus.

NORWICH.—The first concert of the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Union for the season 1874-5, took place on Thursday the 3rd ult., in St. Andrew's Hall, before a large and fashionable audience. His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught (under whose patronage the concert was given) would have been present had he not been spending the week at Sandringham. J. F.

Barnett's Cantata The Ancient Mariner, the principal parts being sustained by Mrs. Banham, Miss Emily Harcourt, Mr. Minns, and Mr. Smith, went, on the whole, with good effect, much of the success being owing to the support given by Dr. Bunnett at the pianoforte and Mr. Walter Lain at the organ. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, and included a pianoforte solo by Dr. Bunnett, and several vocal pieces, contributed by the above-mentioned singers.

PARSONSTOWN, IRELAND.—The Annual Christmas concert in connection with the Model School took place on Tuesday afternoon, the 22nd ult., when the singing-class gave several part-songs with considerable effect. Solos were also sung by the following junior members of class, viz., M. Finney, W. Dooley, A. and B. Browne, J. McGowan, F. McCotten, C. Dooley, &c. The singing-master, Mr. Arnold, was complimented on the general proficiency of the pupils. The Right Hon. the Earl of Rosse kindly distributed the prizes.

SABDEN, LANCASHIRE.—The Choral Society gave the first concert of the season 1874-5, in a large room of the Printworks (kindly lent for the occasion by Messrs. Hindle, Hunter, and Co.), on Saturday evening, November 28th, before a large audience, when Mendelssohn's Oratorio Elijah was performed. The band and chorus numbered upwards of 100, including members of Mr. Charles Hallé's band. The principal vocalists were Madame Helena Walker, Miss Edith Clelland, Mr. Barry Taylor, and Mr. H. Rickard. Madame Walker gave the soprano part in a highly finished manner. Miss Clelland was also very successful, her rendering of "O rest in the Lord" eliciting the warmest plaudits. Mr. Taylor executed his share of the solos in a highly satisfactory manner. Mr. Rickard took the part of the Prophet with success. Mr. G. Ratcliffe presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. T. Pollard at the harmonium. Mr. Seymour led the band, and G. H. Moore, Esq., conducted. The performance was very successful, and great credit is due to Mr. Moore for the energy he has displayed in training the choir.

SHEFFIELD.—The Sheffield Amateur Musical Society, with the Amateur Harmonic Society, gave a performance of Elis in the Albert Hall on the 14th ult., the Societies mustering over 170 performers. It has hitherto been the practice of these Societies to give only private performances, but on this occasion they came before the public with the desire of benefiting the funds of the Tootley Orphanage. All the performers were members of the Society, and, as amateurs, they sustained their parts with much credit. Considering the number of singers, however, there was a lack of that volume of tone one is accustomed to hear in Oratorio performances previously held here, and the Society would do well we think to engage professional assistance in the choir, as was wisely done in the band. Mr. W. G. Parkin officiated at the organ, and Herr Schöllhamer, who holds the post of conductor to both Societies, directed the performance on this occasion. On the 22nd ult. Mr. Charles Harvey's last subscription concert for this season took place in the Albert Hall, which was well filled by a fashionable audience. Mdlle. Patey, Mdlle. Thaddeus Wells, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. J. G. Patey were the vocalists, Mr. Nicholson, solo flute, and Mr. J. Zerbin, accompanist. The applause was frequent, Mdlle. Patey being encored in all her songs, and the concert generally was highly successful.

SHREWSBURY.—The third of Mr. Boucher's series of subscription concerts of classical chamber music took place in the Music Hall on the 9th ult. The artists were Mr. C. H. Forrest, Mr. J. H. Thomas, Mr. W. Cover, R.A.M.; Mr. T. Watkis, and Mr. J. B. Boucher. Dr. Normandie, who was unable to appear in consequence of indisposition, was replaced by Miss Francis. The programme was varied and well selected. Miss Francis sang with the strictest accuracy and refined taste, and Mr. Forrest's solo drew forth a hearty acknowledgment of its excellence from the audience. A trio and two quartets were artistically performed; and we regret that the attraction of the concert did not draw together a larger audience.

SOUTHAMPTON.—The newly-formed Philharmonic Society gave an excellent performance of the Messiah at the Hartley Institute, on the 8th ult. The principal vocalists were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Poole, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. Thurley Beale. The band and chorus numbered 100 performers, who acquitted themselves well under the able conductorship of Mr. Alex. Rowland.

SOUTHPORT.—A concert was given by Mr. Turner at the Cambridge Hall on Monday evening the 7th ult. The artists were Mesdames Sinico and Julia Elton, Messrs. Pearson, Wadmoe, De Jong, Van Biene, and Horton C. Allison. "The green trees" (Balfe) was charmingly sung by Miss Julia Elton. Madame Sinico was much applauded for her singing of "Roberto, oh tu che adoro," "The first rose of summer" (a new song), and "Robin Adair." Mr. Wadmoe and Mr. Pearson made considerable effect in their respective solos. Of the instrumental soloists Mr. De Jong was remarkable for the beauty of tone and the charming style in which he played his flute solo (Fantasia on Scotch airs), Mr. Van Biene for his very able rendering of Lerode's violoncello solo on airs from La Fille du Regiment, and Mr. Horton C. Allison (pianoforte) for his brilliant playing of Mendelssohn's "Andante and Rondo Capriccioso," Schubert's Impromptu No. 2, in A flat, and his own Tarantella in A minor. The accompanist was Mr. Robert Johnson.

STRATFORD.—The West Ham Philharmonic Society gave the first concert of the seventh season in the Town Hall on Tuesday the 15th ult. The programme consisted of Bennett's Cantata The May Queen, the incidental music to Shakespeare's Macbeth ascribed to Matthew Locke, and a miscellaneous selection of ballads and part-songs. The principal vocalists were Miss Pocklington, Miss G. M. Jones, and Messrs. Albert James and Atherton Latta, all of whom gained much applause for their careful and effective singing. Mr. J. T. Bates conducted, and Mr. F. C. Kitson accompanied on the pianoforte, assisted by Mr. J. Tunstall.

SUNDERLAND.—On Sunday the 13th ult. the new organ erected in the Church of the Venerable Bede was opened by C. H. Shepherd, Esq., Member of the Royal Academy of Music. Mr. Shepherd played several voluntaries, and displayed with great skill the varied stops of the beautiful instrument. The Rev. Chas. Green preached in the morning and the Rev. Canon Miles in the evening. The total cost of the organ is over £400, of which £350 has been raised.

TORONTO, CANADA.—Performances of Haydn's Creation were given by the Philharmonic Society, on the 24th and 25th of November. The soprano solos were sung with much success by Mrs. Osgood of Boston, U.S., the tenor being Mr. Rechab Tanby, and the bass, Mr. Egan. The minor parts were sung by Mrs. Cuthbert, Miss Scott, Miss A. Corlett, and Messrs. Bilton, Rees, and Warrington, members of the Society. The choir gave the choruses in a manner which reflected much credit on Mr. F. H. Torrington, the Society's conductor, and the band was generally effective, especially the string portion, which had the advantage of the assistance of the Beethoven Quintette Club. Mr. F. H. Torrington conducted. The third concert was given on November 26, and was miscellaneous. Mrs. Osgood was the vocalist, and was much applauded in her several songs. The Beethoven Quintette Club, consisting of Messrs. C. N. Allen and J. C. Mullaby (violins), H. Heindl and W. Rietzel (violas), and Wulf Fries (violinello), performed Beethoven's Theme and Variations, Op. 104, Mendelssohn's Scherzando and Adagio, Op. 87, and Piano Concerto, Op. 25 (in conjunction with Miss L. Crowle), and several overtures and other compositions in a manner that gave the utmost satisfaction, and elicited enthusiastic applause. The National Anthem concluded the concert.

WINCHESTER.—An excellent concert was given in the New Guildhall, on the 4th ult., by Mr. O. Christian, in connexion with the Mechanics' Institute. The large hall was filled, and a well-arranged programme artistically rendered by Madame Thaddeus Wells, Mr. O. Christian, and Mr. H. Nicholson (solo flute).

WOODHOUSE.—On the 8th ult. a miscellaneous concert of sacred and secular music was given in the Mechanics' Institute, Institution Street, by the members of the choir of St. Mark's Church, assisted by several well-known singers. The object of the entertainment, as stated by the vicar (the Rev. J. S. Abbott), was the very laudable one of establishing a fund for providing music for the use of the church. The first part of the programme consisted of selections from the Oratorios of Handel, Haydn, and Beethoven, and also from Mozart's Twelfth Mass; the second part was made up of glees, part-songs, &c. Miss L. A. Buckingham, in "But Thou didst not leave," acquitted herself admirably. Mr. Longbottom sang the recitative and air, "Every valley" and "Comfort ye" very carefully, and Mr. T. Turner gave the air, "Arm, arm, ye brave," from Judas, in good style. The members of the choir sang well, and were especially effective in "The heavens are telling." Paxton's quartet, "How sweet, how fresh," was charmingly sung by Messrs. Moss, Longbottom, Buckingham, and T. Turner. Mr. Milnes (organist of St. Mark's) accompanied with much judgment on the pianoforte, and in addition played two solos. Mr. George Lee rendered valuable assistance on the harmonium, and Mr. Buckingham (choirmaster) conducted.

UXBRIDGE.—The opening concert of the Choral Society took place on the 10th ult., when a portion of the Messiah formed the first part, and a miscellaneous selection of secular music the second. The soloists were Miss Jessie Royd, Miss Joyce Maas, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. Thurley Beale, all of whom were very successful. The choir numbers among its members some extremely good voices, and the manner in which the points were taken up reflects the highest credit upon the conductor, Mr. Miles.

WESTERHAM.—The Harmonic Society gave a concert on the 15th ult., under the direction of Mr. F. Howell. The first part consisted of selections from the works of Handel, Haydn, &c. and also comprised the air "The daughters of the city come" from J. Barnby's Rebekah. The second part was composed of selections from Mr. F. Howell's opera, The Caliph's Daughter of Calmaraz. The vocalists gave great satisfaction in their respective solos, and the band and chorus were highly effective.

WOOLWICH.—The closing concert of the season, being the second of the series, was held on the 4th ult. at the Town Hall, in the presence of a large and appreciative audience, the majority of the performers being present or former pupils of Miss Mascall, who originated these concerts. The first part of the programme consisted of an original sacred Cantata, entitled Light of the World, the words and music being the composition of Miss Mascall. The solos were sung by Miss Rudd and Mrs. Sallenger. The second part was miscellaneous.

MOUNT MORIAH,

AN ORATORIO BY

J. FREDERICK BRIDGE, Mus. Doc., Oxon., Organist of Manchester Cathedral.

London: Novello, Ewer and Co., and all Musiciansellers.

From the Musical Times, Nov., 1874.

"Displays Dr. Bridge's scholarship to advantage, his graceful power of melody, and his general command of harmonic and contrapuntal resources. 'Mount Moriah' does honour to its author, and will win him the esteem of musicians."

From the Monthly Musical Record, Nov., 1874.

"We have devoted some little space to the analysis of 'Mount Moriah' because it is an oratorio which is not only most creditable to its composer, but also a worthy representative of English music. The difficulties it offers to performers are by no means excessive; and it will, both from its moderate length and its intrinsic merits, be found worthy the attention of musical societies."

From the Musical Standard, Oct., 1874.

"Well deserves practical acquaintance, and from its dimensions, its perspicuity of intention, and the variety it exhibits in small compass, it may well claim attention this season from choral societies looking for something likely to repay study."

From the Choir, Oct., 1874.

"Those who look for a work combining good musicianship with artistic power will not be disappointed."

DR. NAYLOR'S Setting of the Communion Hymn, "O Holy Jesu, Prince of Peace." Threepence.

HYMN TUNES, composed by the Rev. R. BROWN-BORTHWICK. Price 2s. 6d., strongly and elegantly bound in scarlet cloth.

"The Hymn Tunes composed by the Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick are worthy of being extensively known. The melodies are even and flowing, the harmonies effective, though not far-fetched or strained, and the metres are such as can be adapted to the best and most popular words in use among our congregations. There is also a general spirit of reverence and dignity in the Tunes which forms not the least commendable feature in the collection."—Morning Post.

J. HALLETT SHEPPARD.—"Great and glorious J. Father." (New Communion Hymn, by Canon W. WALSHAM How.)

G. B. THACKWRAY'S Two Kyries. Threepence.

37, Kelly-street, N.W. Works, Little King-street North, N.W.
From W. R. WILLIAMS, Esq., Professor of Music, Tydee, Newport, Mon.
"GENTLEMEN," "March 7, 1873."

"Having had several Instruments from you during the last ten months, I feel it is nothing more than a duty on my part to candidly tell you that each Instrument has far exceeded the expectations of the purchaser, and given entire satisfaction, without a single exception.
The Instrument that has arrived to-day is a model of workmanship, and a marvel of cheapness. I wish to make particular mention of the 'Pneumatic Sourdine' stop, which I thought was a sham when I first saw your list, but which I find softens the bass most effectually. In fact your Instruments are without flattery really good and wonderfully cheap. If you wish, you may give publicity to these remarks, which have been unsolicited but duly merited. Respectfully yours,
"To Messrs. E. and W. Snell. W. R. WILLIAMS."

CAUTION.—Being in London, and finding that a number of imitations of my now celebrated SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS are offered to the public as the genuine Instruments, I think it due to the Musical Profession, Amateurs, and the Trade, to make the following statement:—Nine years ago, after much thought and labour, I succeeded in completing the short Grand, adopting the cross-string principle of Steinway, to lessen the size, and making many improvements in the sound-board and action; and it is well known to the musical world of Germany that I was the originator of these Pianos. Since that time additional improvements have been effected, the sale has gradually increased, and at the present time I have more than 250 workmen engaged exclusively on their manufacture. The acknowledged superiority of these Pianofortes to any other description of the same size has caused them to be closely imitated by various makers; and, in one instance, the name "Beethoven Grand," which I originally used as a distinctive trade mark, but have since abandoned, has been adopted; and with unexampled modesty, the public is now invited to accept the copy as the original, and to consider the genuine as spurious. Among the numerous testimonials I have received (including five medals), I may be permitted to mention that his Majesty the King of Saxony, who takes great interest in Art and Manufactures, and is in addition an excellent musician, honoured my manufactory with a visit on February 25th last, and was pleased to express his entire satisfaction. The Depot for my Pianofortes in London is at Mr. F. LAYELL'S, 26, North Audley Street, W., where they may be seen in great variety.—ERNST KAPS. Sole Importer—CHARLES RUSSELL.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FEBRUARY 1, 1875.

A MUSICIAN'S AUTUMN RAMBLE ON THE CONTINENT.

BY EDWARD HECHT.

PERHAPS your readers would not object to stroll in these days of comparative quiet on the musical horizon, to those more favoured countries where the musical orb never entirely disappears; and, if so, my experience of a seven weeks' stay abroad may stimulate the wish to "go and do likewise."

Starting with an excellent friend (himself a very efficient amateur musician), and without any real plan as regards music, our tour proved highly interesting, and we were fortunate in hearing operas and performances for which we dared not even hope.

After a rapid passage through the principal towns of Holland, where we saw the usual sights and were much impressed with the immense treasures of paintings by the most eminent Dutch masters, we went, via Düsseldorf and Cologne, to Munich, and as we were rather too soon for the Operatic season (beginning there on the 2d of August), we went to the Bavarian Tyrol, saw such charming places as Tegernsee and Kreuth, and from there crossed the Austrian frontier and made a lengthened stay at the beautiful Achensee, whose blue colour has greater claims to be celebrated in song and dance, than the so-called "blue Danube." The lake is so beautiful that I think a higher form of music than a valse may more fitly describe its varied charms, and a musical poem will surely one day owe its origin to the Achensee if the right genius happen to visit its shores. From this delightful spot we went, via Innsbruck, back to Munich, and were just in time for a great German Sängerkunst (for male voices only), which had attracted about 6,000 more or less strong voices to the Capital on the Isar. A musical festival on such a large scale is never an attraction for me, and if such a gathering is robbed of the charm of female voices and of the gay appearance of the fairer sex on such occasions, the monotony of the men's voices, coupled with the performance of less interesting compositions, make such a festival (to me at least) more of a sight than a musical treat, and this one was no exception to the rule. I must however inform your readers that there were several first-class works performed—amongst which I will mention Franz Lachner's new hymn "Macte Imperator," which ought to become a kind of German war-song; F. Gernsheim's "Römische Leichenfeier" (Roman funeral dirge), a most impressive and noble composition; Bruch's Triumphgesang, telling in large chords the enthusiasm of the Roman soldiery for their Imperator; and several compositions of merit by such composers as F. Wüllner, Vincenz Lachner (a worthy brother of the first-named master), and J. Dürner, who, I believe, died in Edinburgh.

But on the whole, these days of the festival were too much crowded with second and third-rate compositions, whose claims to be heard were founded rather on their historical than their musical value. The selection was, with the exceptions named, most unfortunate, and men like Weber, Schneider, and even Mendelssohn, were represented by their weaker specimens of part-songs or choruses. The arrangements as regards the placing of the singers (whose attendance at rehearsals was very indifferent) were also so bad as to damage the effect which such numbers should produce; and by having the platform almost on a level, the effect was anything but favourable for the production of a great volume of sound, or for precise singing, as many of the vocalists were unable to see the conductors. Some of these latter were very eccentric in their mode of beating time. One gentleman laboured with arms and feet, and looked occasionally like a black windmill a little out of order, which tried to right itself again. Another refused to use the bâton, and clapped his hands together so as to serve the double purpose of beating time and encouraging the singers, by what sounded like a faint applause. I could say more about this festival and its many speeches, hurrahs, hohs and untold quantities of emptied beer-barrels; I believe that the whole army of singers present could have found a malty grave in the streams of Erlanger, Pilsener, and Viennese that were flowing from morning till very late at night.

On the third day there was an excursion to the Starnberger Lake (on whose shores, fantastic King Ludwig II. loves to reside in preference to his grandfather's modern Athens), and certainly this day was for many the most enjoyable, the only regret seeming to be that there was no time for a rehearsal for this part of the festival, where beer and speeches flowed so freely, and the guests had to content themselves with a performance à l'improvisu. I must not omit to state that Munich looked its very best, being decked out with profuse banners, flags and garlands of flowers, some of which were very tastefully hung from the windows over red damask or cloth.

After this long preliminary your readers will get as impatient as myself to hear about the interesting musical treats which I promised them at the outset. I will therefore no longer delay to state that they consisted of the following:—A first-rate performance of Donizetti's "Fille du Régiment," ever fresh and pleasing: the heroine was represented by a new acquisition to the Munich Opera, Fräulein Meysenheim, a young Dutch lady, who has mastered German to perfection, and is gifted with a charming voice well cultivated; her acting is also very good, and she was most ably supported by the veteran Kindermann, who gave the old Sergeant with great aplomb, and proved that he had kept his voice in very good order. All the other parts were also in good hands, and I can say that I never enjoyed that little opera so much.

On the second day of the Festival, Wagner's "Tannhäuser" was given, and about 1500 singers had free admissions presented to them by the Intendant of the theatre, which, considering the attraction of the "Tannhäuser," and the great influx of strangers to Munich, was very liberal, and raised in my mind the question, how such an act of courtesy could ever be done in England, where there is a "Royal" theatre only in name but not in reality, and where the object is frequently not the progress of Art, but the triumph of great stars, whose powers of attraction fill the Impresario's pocket. Shall we ever see an Opera house in England, based on principles of Art and not of gain? I doubt it, and yet I fear that as long as it is wanting, there can be no real stimulus given to native talent, of which there is plenty. Opera in England will always mean, trying new singers in old parts and making comparisons.

The performance of "Tannhäuser" was magnificent; every part was in excellent hands, but foremost I must mention Herr and Frau Vogel as Tann-häuser and Venus, and Fräulein Radecke as Elisabeth. The Chorus and Orchestra were perfection, and I have never heard such delicate accompaniments, and such breadth and power when it was required. They give the "Tannhäuser" in Munich in the so-called Paris version, where the first scene between Tannhäuser and Venus is very much lengthened and ballet scenes are introduced; but I must confess that I prefer the original version to that new pasticcio, which Wagner wrote after having gone through a great metamorphosis in his style: although some of the old themes are elaborately treated, the whole lacks unity, and betrays the different periods of the composer's genius.

Two days after this treat, we heard Byron's "Manfred," adapted for the German stage by Herr Carl Zenke, the incidental music being from the pen of Schumann. The Overture and other fragments of this work have been heard in England. I can only speak with the greatest enthusiasm of the masterly performance of this wonderful creation of the great Poet and the great Musician. The noble thoughts put into the mouth of Manfred could not have been more finely rendered than by Mr. Possart, the tragic actor, and all the other parts were given to perfection. The scene of the apparition of Astarte made a most lasting impression upon me, and I did not know what to admire most—the intensity of Manfred's appeal, or the splendid performance of the Chorus and of the first singers of the Opera (mind! the first singers of the Opera giving their services to sing on and behind the scenes of a drama! Where can we have that in England? Such a combination of talents in the sister arts is here quite out of the question.)

I could write much about the splendid inspiration of Schumann, but will only state that I think "Manfred" contains some of the grandest pages that were ever written in music—witness the fine chorus in D minor "of the Evil Agencies," and as a contrast, the lovely adjuration of the witch of the Alps; not to forget the grand Overture. The orchestra, under Capellmeister Levi, was everything that the most fastidious critic could desire, and its chief deserves a laurel wreath for inspiring his forces with his own enthusiasm for the best in Art.

The next day we heard a very fine performance of Cherubini's "Wasserträger," which Mr. Mapleson gave for one night, last season but one, and withdrew, for want of interest on the part of the public.

It is not the province of this paper to enumerate the great impressions my friend and I received from Munich's other treasures, such as its churches, and wonderful collections of paintings and sculpture; suffice it therefore to say that we thoroughly enjoyed them, and Munich life altogether pleased us very much, thanks to the very friendly reception we met with from some of the most eminent musicians residing there, and many a pleasant hour was chatted away.

From Munich we went to Salzburg, where we inspected the Mozarteum, which we consider rather a poor institution as regards the relics to be found there: we anticipated seeing at least some interesting score of the great master; but all they possess consists of some instruments which Mozart used to play upon in Vienna, some letters, and a few uninteresting musical manuscripts. I hear, however, that the institution gives some good concerts in the winter, and has moreover established a Conservatoire of Music which promises well.

After spending a day at Salzburg, and driving to the Königsee, whose grandeur we could not realise owing to very bad weather, we went on to Vienna, and were fortunate enough to be just in time for the opening of the Opera season. The first opera which we heard was Verdi's "Aida," which was put on the stage with the greatest splendour—costumes, scenery, ballet, everything that would dazzle the eye, was found there, coupled with a very fine band and chorus (though in respect to finish, inferior to Munich) and excellent Solo-singers like Frau Wilt (who sang under the name of Vilda this season in London), who gave the part of Aida in splendid style. Adams, the tenor, and Beck, the baritone, were also very good, and the minor parts were well represented. I confess that I was not prepared to find Verdi so much influenced by the later writings of Wagner; but, to my surprise, I found, especially in the introduction and in the first Act, many points and passages that were undoubtedly suggested by the "Meister-singer;" and Verdi has never before this tried to be so interesting as regards his counterpoint and instrumentation. The latter is, with few exceptions, very masterly, and sometimes quite novel. The ballet music is most charming and the frequent introduction of real Eastern themes gives to the whole an original colouring. I should certainly rejoice to see this work accepted at one of the Italian Operas in London, as it contains much that is worth hearing.

On the following day we had the chance of hearing "Lohengrin." The performance on the whole lacked finish, but some passages were given with great power,—for instance the arrival of the Swan in the first Act, and the grand scene of Friedrich and Ortrud, finishing with that wonderful unison in F sharp minor.

Two days after that we were fortunate enough to hear Schumann's only Opera, "Genoveva," of which the Overture is familiar to concert-goers. This was given with more care than "Lohengrin," and the splendid acting of Mdme. Dustmann, as Genoveva, and of M. Adams, as Golo, will not soon be forgotten by us. The Opera contains some magnificent music, especially in the third Act, where there is an incantation scene, which is a masterpiece of musical composition and most impressive also in its dramatic aspect. On the whole, however, I must state (though being an humble and ardent admirer of Schumann) that there is a certain want of plastic repose in the Opera, and that the hearer has more the impression of listening to an interesting Cantata than to an Opera. The last act especially lacks all the qualities which one expects in a dramatic Opera, and that which should be the climax, namely, the finding of Genoveva by her husband, is, to my mind at least, too contemplative and too tame. Yet I feel grateful for my good fortune which enabled me to hear this noble work (for such it is nevertheless, as Schumann had only noble thoughts), and particularly as there is but little chance of our hearing this Opera in England.

Your readers will agree with me when I say that my friend and I were very fortunate in hearing, in the space of a fortnight, the works I have mentioned; and I trust that our lucky star will accompany all those of your readers who may feel inclined to set out for a similar tour. Should it happen to be later in the season, their chances will be still better than ours, and they will also come in for concerts, both in Munich and Vienna.

"ARRANGEMENTS."

BY HENRY C. LUNN.

It will perhaps scarcely be credited that I once saw the Overture to "Der Freischütz" arranged for two guitars. I have much pleasure in adding that I did not hear it; but that such atrocities are perpetrated is a fact which will be affirmed by all who have ever mixed in what may be called the Bohemian world of art. Persons who play a little or sing a little conceive that they have as much right to be catered for as those who have devoted their best energies to music in its most intellectual aspect; and no doubt the enthusiastic amateur who attempted to play the Overture to "Zauberflöte" as a solo upon the flute believed that he was advancing a step beyond his musical friends, who contented themselves, as a rule, with trashy Operatic Fantasias. In my very young days I have a distinct recollection of what were termed "musical evenings," the chief peculiarity in which was that none of the guests were at all musical. This may seem paradoxical; but the truth is that the lady of the house had a firm reliance upon the value of those natural gifts which she said cultivation only destroyed. The consequence was that the vocal and instrumental compositions which were performed, although utterly unlike those given by trained artists, had a certain attraction to a company where players and listeners were on a perfect equality of ignorance. Many there were amongst those assembled on these occasions who had real qualifications for the art, and who might, with careful teaching, have become excellent musicians; but the rising generation at this time had not been encouraged in the belief that music was as much a necessity as reading; and the fathers and mothers of the day had not shaken off the creed that playing and singing were expensive accomplishments which unfitted young people for the active duties of life. Pianofortes were only very gradually creeping into the houses of the middle classes, and many of these were carefully kept locked for fear anybody should deteriorate their value by playing upon them. It may be imagined that, under these circumstances, an extempore concert was, as I have said, suited only for those who brought little or no musical knowledge to the entertainment. A young lady would, perhaps, play some well-known airs, with an indescribable bass, which she took great credit for, as being entirely her own: occasionally some variations upon these themes would be ventured upon, which, if they did not amuse the company, at least but rarely interrupted the conversation. The solo vocal music by the ladies was so interlarded with shakes, turns and embellishments, that it was difficult indeed to discover what airs formed the groundwork for these flourishes; but in numerous cases the pure and fresh voices of the untrained singers spoke with more truthful earnestness to the hearts of the listeners than many I have since heard in a public concert-room. Of course the sterner sex (as was the custom in these days) treated music with the utmost contempt, as a trifling amusement only suited for school-girls; but some young men were occasionally prevailed upon to sing a "good song," the chorus to which usually enlisted the entire strength of the company, the untutored noise being tolerably endurable, save when some ambitious individual insisted upon what he called "harmonising." The vocal portion of the evening usually concluded with a song from the host, who, after commencing in a key a great deal too low, tried again in one a great deal too high, and eventually settled in a pitch which utterly prevented the possibility of his singing three consecutive notes in tune.

Now it will no doubt be said by many that such untought amateurs as I have described have passed away; but those who dive beneath the surface will see that they still exist, although in a transitional state. True, they have felt the force of the musical educational movement which has steadily progressed for so many years, but "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing;" and, failing to reach true art, yet dissatisfied with their former ignorance, they effect a compromise, and content themselves with "arrangements." Do we not see in the programmes of "Penny Readings," for instance, Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor appear, and does it not turn out to be a hash formed by bits of the movements, with a little seasoning added by the musical cook? Do we not hear at private parties choruses turned into songs, and songs into choruses; movements from Beethoven's Symphonies taken as subjects for ballads, and other distortions from original works, which could only be tolerated by listeners whose artistic feeling is not sensitive enough to experience a shock at such desecrations? Have not words been put to Mendelssohn's songs without words, and have not these exquisite little gems been published in a so-called sacred collection, with symphonies patched on in various parts by the arranger? Do we not see an "arrangement" of a movement from a Symphony, which is not the movement at all, but only just as much of it as may be thought will sell to amateurs who know no better? Yes, the young lady who plays her own bass and variations, and the gentleman who sings a "good song," are still amongst us; but they call themselves musicians now; and, although illumined with but the faintest glimmer of the divine light of art, they fancy that they are basking in the full mid-day sun.

Everybody knows that wherever there is a demand there will be a supply; and there can be no wonder, therefore, that as long as these half-formed artists abound, they will be well provided for. But is it not somewhat criminal to allow such garbled versions of standard works to grow up around us without a word of discontent? Musicians, of course, do not want them; but apathy on the subject becomes selfishness; for it is the duty of all who would aid the progress of art not only to pass by such productions themselves, but to use their best endeavours to prevent others from purchasing them, by leading them to an appreciation of the true works of art and exposing those which are false. When professors teach them without a murmur, and critics review them without a protest, a positive harm is done, for this tacit recognition of their claims is accepted as a proof that, although manufactured for amateurs, they are not unwelcome to artists, and thus they flourish by the patronage of one class and the toleration of another. If those who hold the educational power within their grasp would but be true to themselves and their art, such "arrangements" as I have mentioned would be speedily banished from our drawing-rooms; for, to the credit of many who perform these works, I may say, from positive experience, that, like children, who cling to a love for their nursery tales, they do so from ignorance of the real treasures in art which lie ready for them outside their prison walls.

THE excitement in Worcester consequent upon the refusal of the Dean and Chapter to grant the use of the Cathedral for the Festival of the Three Choirs, which should, in turn, have taken place there during the present year, still continues; and—from the determined attitude of those who assume that possession is, in this case, even more than “nine points” of the law—it appears not likely to subside. Meetings have been held, and conferences with the small opposing clerical body have taken place, but without effect; the latest news being that a petition to the Queen has been presented, with the hope of inducing her to persuade the Dean and Chapter to listen to the voice of the majority upon a matter so important, not only to sacred musical art, but to the Charity for the benefit of which these Festivals were instituted. Meanwhile we cannot but express surprise at the bland manner in which the three Choirs, after having had an effectual stop put to the continuance of the Festival in the old form, have been requested to aid in establishing the new. Turning a person out of the home which for years he has occupied with honour to himself and all around him, may be one of those periodical exercises of despotic authority which it is better to bear with fortitude; but to call upon his best and truest friends to help in getting the house ready for another is an experiment which even a Dean and Chapter can hardly hope to prove successful.

It is a trite saying that we are often not aware of what is passing immediately around us. A striking illustration of this has just occurred. We have in our time become acquainted with much music written for the service of the Church by modern composers, and thought that we knew the names of all those most widely celebrated for the production of works of this class; but we find, by a paragraph in a contemporary, that the most eminent person in this branch of the art is Thomas Lloyd Fowle, Doctor of Music and Master of Arts, of Eastgate, Winchester, and that so popular are his sacred compositions that he is styled “The People’s Musician.” Considering that 2,000 persons have signed a petition to the Premier urging him to grant a pension from the Civil Service List to Dr. Fowle, we should be sorry if our ignorance of his seemingly well-known appellation were extended to those who have the power of granting the prayer of this petition; but when we find that his two thousand admirers express their opinion that “the said T. L. Fowle has done more for church music for country choirs than any man living,” we cannot help thinking that the names of a few others who have done something for church music will immediately be called to mind, and so effectually displace this people’s idol as to make him pray to be delivered from his friends in future.

THE opening of the new Opera House in Paris, which took place on the 5th ult., is more an event to be chronicled in the pages of the “Builder” than in those of a musical journal, for the performance was shorn of its attraction by the absence of Madame Nilsson and M. Faure, and the programme was made up of shreds and patches. If only as a curiosity, however, it deserves to be recorded: Overture, “Masaniello,” first and second acts of “La Juive,” Overture, “William Tell,” Blessing of the Daggers in “The Huguenots,” and second act of the Ballet, “La Source.” The admiration with which the Parisians regarded the Lord Mayor of London and the Sheriffs, who were present on the occasion by express invitation, is of course exceedingly gratifying; and as the great City Potentate told the President, on his arrival in the French Capital, that the Corporation of London always desired to be foremost in fostering the progress of art, we may presume that he effectually represented the many eminent English musicians who were not invited.

WE are glad to say that our favourite English Contralto, Madame Patey, has achieved a success in Paris which will no doubt render her services for future performances of Oratorio in the French Capital as necessary as they have long been considered in London. All the Parisian papers in commenting upon her singing in the “Messiah,” have dwelt in glowing terms upon that beauty of voice and purity of style which have gained for her in England the highest place as an exponent of sacred music. Le Ménestrel, after briefly recording her many triumphs in London and at the Provincial Festivals, compares her voice with that of Albani, and expresses surprise at the perfect manner in which she pronounces the French language. In the air “Il garde ses ouailles” (“He shall feed His flock”) she created an extraordinary effect, and elicited an encore which it was impossible to resist. “C’était, on peut le dire” (continues Le Ménestrel) “toute une révélation,” a genuine expression of feeling which we will not destroy the force of by translating.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

AT the concert of the 16th ult. (the first after the Christmas vacation) Rubinstein’s Overture to his Opera, “Dimitri Dostkoi,” was the novelty; but we question whether a work so disconnected and diffuse in treatment can enlist the sympathies of those who at the same performance have Beethoven’s Symphony in A, and even Mendelssohn’s juvenile Overture, “The Wedding of Camacho,” placed before them. Schumann’s Pianoforte Concerto in A was on the whole well played by Mr. Oscar Beringer; his style, however, being perhaps more acceptable to those who are more sympathetic than ourselves with the “higher development” school. The vocalists were Mr. E. Lloyd and Miss Sophie Lowe. On the 23rd ult. Herr Wilhelmj played Mendelssohn’s Violin Concerto with an effect quite equal to that which he created on the Thursday previous in the same work at the Royal Albert Hall Concerts. A feature in the programme was the first appearance here of Madlle. Johanna Levier, who gave an Aria from Mozart’s “Zauberflöte” and two of Mendelssohn’s Lieder with that charm of voice and style which secured for her the good opinion of all competent judges the first time she was heard in this country at the Royal Albert Hall. Mr. Sims Reeves, who never was in finer voice, delighted everybody by his exquisite singing; and amongst the orchestral pieces a welcome item was the Symphony in G minor of Sir Sterndale Bennett, a work which we are glad to see making its way to the fame it deserves. Mr. Manns conducted the concerts with his usual efficiency.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CONCERTS.

THE new series of these concerts commenced on the 21st ult., with a band increased and improved, and a programme, both of vocal and instrumental music, in the highest degree attractive. The quality of the orchestra was fairly and successfully tested in the Overture to “Guillaume Tell,” Beethoven’s “Pastoral Symphony,” G. A. Macfarren’s Overture to “St. John the Baptist” and Wagner’s “Kaiser-Marsch,” all of which, under the intelligent conductorship of Mr. Barnby, were finely played, the “Pastoral Symphony,” indeed, being rendered with a precision and variety of colouring which reflected the utmost credit upon all concerned. The re-appearance of Herr Wilhelmj, the eminent violinist, was an event of much interest, and his performance fully proved his right to take rank amongst the most accomplished artists of the day. His reading of Mendelssohn’s Concerto was in every respect thoroughly satisfactory. The first movement—which is, in our opinion too often hurried through, even by the greatest violinists—was given with a steadiness and perfect command of every passage impossible to be too highly praised; the Andante displayed to the utmost advantage the performer's purity of tone and delicacy of phrasing; and the Finale, although full of vivacity, was not too impulsive to allow of every note being heard, and every point of the orchestral accompaniment being clearly and intelligibly understood. The applause with which Herr Wilhelmj was greeted at the conclusion of the Concerto could not be controlled until he had re-appeared on the platform to bow his acknowledgments. In the second part of the concert he played a "Romance" and paraphrase of a "Larghetto" by Chopin, the latter of which pleased so much as to be re-demanded. Madlle. Johanna Levier sang with infinite refinement of feeling and dramatic effect, Rossini's "Sombre forêt," Mendelssohn's "Zuleika," and Schubert's "Wohin," the latter song being enthusiastically encored. Unfortunately Mr. Sims Reeves was prevented, by indisposition, from appearing, and his place was supplied by Signor Fabrini (who happened to be in the Hall), "Adelaide," one of the songs set down for Mr. Reeves, being rendered with much feeling and judgment, and Mendelssohn's "If with all your hearts" receiving the utmost justice from an artist who, had he even been less competent for the task, well deserved the thanks of the audience. Mr. Randegger presided with his usual ability at the pianoforte. On Tuesday the 26th ult. an exceptionally fine performance of Handel's "Israel in Egypt" was given. The principal artists, Madlle. Johanna Levier, Miss Katharine Poyntz, Miss Sterling, and Signor Fabrini (who again replaced Mr. Sims Reeves) sang with considerable success, Madlle. Levier exhibiting great breadth of style in the air "Thou didst blow." To the chorus, however, must fairly be awarded the honours of the evening, several of the great choral numbers having been redemanded. Mr. Barnby, however, wisely refused to accede to these demands, which in the instance of "The Lord is a man of war," finely sung by the male voices of the choir, were so persistent as to render it difficult to proceed with the performance. Dr. Stainer played the organ part to the Oratorio with marked ability, and the excellent additional accompaniments by Mr. Macfarren received full justice from the large and thoroughly efficient band. A feature of notable interest was the organ performance of M. Guilmant, the talented organist of La Trinité, Paris, whose rendering of Bach's Toccata and Fuga in D minor and an improvisation on some of Handel's airs, was fully appreciated by the large audience. The next Orchestral Concert will take place on Tuesday, the 2nd inst., when several important Orchestral pieces (notably Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony) will be performed. Herr Wilhelmj is to play a Concerto by F. Hégar, for the first time, and his own arrangements of Wagner's "Albumblatt," and Chopin's "Notturmo." Madlle. Johanna Levier and Mr. Sims Reeves are to be the vocalists. The Concert will be conducted, as usual, by Mr. Barnby.

A PERFORMANCE of Mr. G. A. Macfarren's Oratorio, "St. John the Baptist," was given by the Brixton Choral Society at the Angell Town Institution on the 18th ult., before a large audience. Presuming that a work depending for its effect so much upon orchestral colouring can be satisfactorily represented, with the accompaniment of a pianoforte and small organ, there can be no doubt that, although the instruments might have been of a higher character, and at least in tune, the performers—Mr. James Coward, and Mr. J. G. Boardman—could scarcely have been better selected. For the choral portion of the Oratorio we have every praise: the members of the choir had evidently been well drilled, and sang throughout with an appreciation of the author's meaning which reflected the highest credit upon themselves and their conductor, Mr. William Lemare. Many of the choruses were finely given—especially "Behold I will send My messenger," "My soul, praise the Lord," and the Finale, "What went you out in the wilderness for to see"—the balance of tone being excellently preserved; and in indeed save an occasional irresolution in the "Dialogue" choruses, there was scarcely a weak point. Mr. Thurley Beale, in the trying music of the Baptist, achieved a success which should nerve him to renewed exertion, for if he continue to sing as he did on this occasion he may confidently hope to occupy the highest place in his profession. Not only in voice, precision and clearness of enunciation was he everything that could be desired, but his delivery of the many eloquent recitatives with which the Oratorio abounds was marked by an intelligent perception of the text and a declamatory power which secured the most enthusiastic demonstrations of applause at the conclusion of every piece. Madame A. Barnett, as the Narrator, had an arduous task, for her music is not of that telling quality which ensures the sympathy of an audience; but she acquitted herself admirably, her fine voice and well trained method of delivery eliciting the warmest marks of approbation. Miss Arthur has a good soprano voice, but is not yet qualified to attack the florid song, "I rejoice in my youth:" a good word must however, be said for Mr. John Williams, who gave the music of Herod with much effect, betraying nevertheless, an occasional tendency to force a voice which appeared to us by no means to require any such undue effort. In so small a concert-room as that at the Angell Town Institution we can scarcely perhaps expect that everybody shall be comfortably seated; but we confess to have been surprised to find that we were placed just inside the door (with a knowledge that we should have been placed outside, had we been a few minutes later), considering that we had received a communication, said to be "by order," stating that "special arrangements would be made for the accommodation of members of the press."

THE Services at St. Anne's Church, Dean Street, Soho, will, we are informed, present during the coming season of Lent some features of considerable interest to lovers of Church Music. As in former years the Passion Music of Bach (according to St. John) will be used several times before Easter with an accompaniment of orchestra, harp and organ. In addition to this it is intended to introduce every Sunday evening during Lent, in place of the Anthem, Bach's Cantata "God's time is the best" (Gottes zeit ist die allerbeste zeit), a work which is generally regarded as scarcely inferior to the various settings of the "Passion." This, as well as other portions of the service, will be accompanied by an orchestra.

WE are glad to find that at a recent meeting of the Stewards of the late Gloucester Festival, it was decided to hand over a third of the collections at the doors to the Worcester Charity. Unquestionably it would have been better had the refusal of the Dean and Chapter to grant the use of the Cathedral for the meeting in this year, been made known before the last Gloucester Festival; but as the money taken on the occasion was understood to be for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the three dioceses, it would scarcely have been legal to appropriate any portion of it for other purposes.

THE Revd. Henry East Havergal, vicar of Cople, Bedford, whose death occurred during the past month, was one of the most enthusiastic and earnest of the musical clergy. A graduate of New College, Oxford, he was afterwards Chaplain both to this College and Christchurch; but on accepting the appointment at Cople, he devoted himself to the duties of his new office and the general improvement of music in the village and neighbourhood. He built an F organ, with his own hands, for the church, upon which he played during divine service, and also constructed for his use, a chiming apparatus, so that he became organist, bell-ringer and parson. He was the conductor of a Musical Society at Bedford; and it may be mentioned, in proof of his love for music, that in a trial of Dr. Crotch's Oratorio, "Palestine," he played the double bass and sang the alto part in the choruses at the same time. Before quitting Oxford, Mr. Havergal published two editions of George Wither's "Hymns of the Church," a copy of Tallis's pieces, from the MS., and several other musical works.

MESSRS. NOVELLO are about to issue an octavo edition of Graun's "Death of Jesus" (Der tod Jesu) which will we are sure be received with satisfaction by those—and they are many—who consider that this fine work has hitherto been treated with unmerited neglect.

A CONCERT in aid of the funds of St. Mary-the-Less, Lambeth, was held on the 18th ult., in the School-room in connection with the Church, under the direction of Madame Liebe Konss. An excellent programme was provided, the most successful pieces being the quartett "Sancta Mater" (Rossini) well rendered by Miss Clara Perry, Madame Konss, Mr. Oakland, and Mr. Newton Baylis; "O lovely peace," by Miss Kate Meed and Madame Konss, "With verdure clad" by Miss Clara Perry (a pupil of Madame Konss), and the trio "My lady the countess," excellently given by Miss Perry, Miss Mead, and Madame Konss, and enthusiastically encored. The programme included a violin solo, and several glees. The accompanists were Madame Konss and Mr. Albrecht.

ONE more link with a bygone musical age has passed away in the person of Mr. J. G. Waetzig, who died on the 20th ult., at the age of 84. The deceased gentleman was for 22 years a member of the private band of their late Majesties George IV. and William IV., and 12 years director of the band of H. M. 2nd Regiment of Life Guards. An enthusiast in his art, Mr. Waetzig was never so happy as when relating the reminiscences of his musical career; and his genial and sympathetic nature not only endeared him to a large circle of friends, but enabled him to pass the latter years of his life in that tranquillity and repose which he had so legitimately earned.

MR. RIDLEY PRENTICE recently gave a concert at the Alexandra Hall, Blackheath, which was very successful. The vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Alice Barnett, and Mr. Henry Guy. Violin, Mr. H. Holmes; accompanist, Mr. H. Parker. Mr. Prentice played a Prelude and Fugue by Mendelssohn, and joined Mr. Holmes in a Sonata by Schumann. The above named vocalists gave great satisfaction in their several pieces.

ON the Feast of the Epiphany a special Service was held in St. George's Church, Bloomsbury, in aid of the Benevolent Fund of the College of Organists. For the Anthem the greater part of Bach's "Christmas Oratorio" was given, the solos being sustained by boys of the Chapel Royal, Windsor; Mr. Burgess Perry, alto; Messrs. Stedman and Hunt, tenors; and Messrs. Musgrave and Briggs, basses. The Choir contained many leading members of the different London choirs, and the music was very effectively rendered. Mr. Warwick Jordan conducted, and Mr. E. H. Turpin, who is to be congratulated upon his successful organization of the service, accompanied.

It is with much regret that we record the death of Mr. John Henry Griesbach, which took place after a painful illness, on the 9th ult. Mr. Griesbach was well known, not only as an accomplished musician, but as a cultivated man of science; and he has left one work upon the art which he chiefly devoted himself to, entitled an "Analysis of Musical Sounds," which shows much acuteness and power.

WE regret to learn that Sir W. Sterndale Bennett, who has been indisposed for some time, was seized with serious illness on Friday last, and that the medical men who are attending him, Sir W. Gull, Dr. King, and Mr. Forbes, consider the symptoms of a nature to cause grave anxiety.

A CHORAL SERVICE was held in Greville Place Church, Boundary Road, on Wednesday, 30th December, by the St. John's Wood and Kilburn Choral Association, when the "Messiah" was performed. The choruses were fairly rendered, and the solos were sung by Mrs. Sharp, Miss Callard, Messrs. Robinson, Simpson, Lewis, and Morant. Mr. Sharp conducted and accompanied on the organ. "Judas Maccabæus" is in rehearsal.

THE concert of the St. George's Glee Union on the 8th ult. was miscellaneous, consisting of Glees and Songs—the most successful of which were the "Christmas Madrigal" "The Blue Bells," "For the New Year," and "Blow, blow, thou winter wind." The instrumentalists were Master Frank Augarde (violin), and Miss Julia Augarde (pianoforte), the latter of whom gained an encore for Mendelssohn's "Andante and Rondo Capriccioso;" and the vocalists, Miss Janet King, Miss Bessie Spear, Mrs. Allen, Mrs. Webster, Mr. Beaumont, and Mr. Harvey. Mr. Garside conducted, assisted in the second part by Mr. J. A. Stock.

THE result of the Christmas examinations held by the Church Choral Society and College of Church Music, London, is as follows:—Senior Choral Fellows: M. Birket Foster, Jesus College, Cambridge (by competition); W. H. Birch, Ch.F., Amersham Hall School, Reading. Choral Fellow: F. G. Cole, St. Mary's, Staines. Choral Associates: (2nd class), J. W. Wilson, Junr., Holy Trinity, Upper Tooting; (3rd class), G. H. L. Edwards, Poplar. Harmony Prizeman, F. G. Cole, St. Mary's, Staines. Examiners:—Section a, the Warden and H. J. Stark, S.C.F.; Section b, J. Gordon Saunders, Mus. B., Oxon., S.C.F.; Section c, Walter H. Sangster, Mus. B., Oxon., S.C.F.; Section d, Edward Dearle, Mus.D., Cantab.; Registrar, W. J. Jennings, B.A., Cantab., S.C.F.

ON the 13th ult., a concert was given in the large School-room of Chelsea Congregational Church, by Miss Mary Johnson, Fell. Coll. Org. (Organist of the Church), in aid of the Debt Liquidation Fund. Miss Maria Langley and Mr. Alfred Rutland were the vocalists. A feature at the concert was the appearance of Madlle. Franziska Friese (of Berlin) as solo violinist, and Herr H. Völlmar as solo pianist, both of whom met with the most enthusiastic reception, their performance of movements from the "Kreutzer Sonata" (Beethoven) being encored. A choir of forty voices, conducted by Mr. H. Evans, sang some part-songs with good effect. There was a large audience, and the concert was most successful.

REVIEWS.

A Morning, Communion, and Evening Service, in E flat, composed by John Stainer.

THE latter portion of this comprehensive work has been some while before the world in a larger and more expensive edition. It is now continued, so to speak, backwards, and the whole presented in an octavo form. Terms of the highest praise are due to the composition, which is an honour to the author and to church music; and if in the following remarks exception be taken to some points, it will be in matters of taste rather than of judgment, and in deference to a writer who proves his title to think for himself.

We marvel, for instance, at the seemingly cross reading which illustrates the "crying of all the earth," "the Heavens and all the Powers therein," "all Angels," and the "Cherubin and Seraphin," by a pianissimo passage in the Te Deum, and we wonder too at the repetition of the same idea in the Sanctus. In the latter instance, there is of course the consideration of the feelings of the communicants, which, at the moment, must be entirely subdued, though the persons are exhorted to join in the celestial song; but this cannot be the case in the Canticle, where the statement is made of the full-toned adoration of the many-voiced choir. The conception is not new; but it scarcely gains propriety by long standing. It is a happy application of the powerful effect of a remote modulation, to change the key from E flat into D, at the passage beginning "Holy," separating thus the song itself from the description of its "continual" vociferation; the same device is employed to suggest a burst of sublime radiance when St. Stephen sees the heavens open during his address in the judgment hall, in St. Paul; and this was anticipated in the sestet in Don Giovanni, where Donna Anna and Don Ottavio, with torches, enter the dark courtyard of the lady's mansion; and all three instances present the same two keys in the embodiment of the analogous purpose,—how curious are the coincidences of thought in different artists! The fitness is beyond our recognition, however, of the perseverance in the same remote key from the original, in the relation of the united praise of the Apostles, the Prophets, the Martyrs and the holy Church, who, being all mundane, might well have their laudations distinguished in tone from those of the higher world, as one may believe them to be distinct in personality. Again, it seems curious that the word "God," and the first syllable of "Sabaoth," should be set to the extremest of discords, the diminished 3rd, which is most rarely used by the best masters, and then to express the contraction of the heart in keenest anguish, a feeling as stifled or compressed as is the very narrow interval that characterises the harmony. The successive Solos for treble and bass, to the passages referring to the Incarnation are charmingly melodious; and the re-entry of the chorus at "Thou sittest at the right hand," is graphically true to the situation. The good effect is questionable of the full close in the original key of the piece, prior to the words "Day by day," and the digression at this place into a new tonality, since it suggests a conclusion where a fresh section of the hymn is about to begin. The recurrence of the opening theme as set to the final sentence, gives musical completeness to the work.

A very grand setting of the Benedictus, again and again calls forth admiration. The reiteration of the word "Blessed" by the three upper voices while the basses proceed with the text, is powerful and highly suggestive. To pass over many another incident of interest, let us note with pleasure the two passages for unaccompanied voices, "In holiness and righteousness," "and to guide our feet," which make a capital variety in the generally prevailing quality of tone, and are very attractive in themselves. We cannot like, although it has the precedent of Handel, the effect of the consecutive 7ths, between the outside parts, $\text{D}^{\flat} \text{A}^{\flat} \text{G}$ nor of the violent false relation between the bottom note of the one and the top note of the other chord, page 22, score 3, bar 3; it is difficult to comprehend how ears that must be most sensitive, can train themselves to accept and doubtless to admire a progression that is against all rule, and, to our feeling, against all relish; but, on the other hand, no reverence for Handel's acknowledged greatness nor respect for the merit we are delighted to acknowledge in Dr. Stainer, can induce us to let the point pass without a protest. A like passage occurs at page 41, score 2, bar 3, $\text{C}^{\flat} \text{B}$ $\text{D}^{\flat} \text{C}$, and the effect improves not by repetition.

Here is also a setting of the alternative Cantic, Jubilate Deo; joyous indeed is its prominent character, and the felicitous conception is not better than the music in which this is expressed. A strain for the solo voices or for a semi-chorus, "for the Lord is gracious," is singularly attractive, and remains in the memory when the whole piece is ended. The appropriation of the "Glory" from the preceding number is an economy of invention for which we should not have given the composer credit, who, if he love his art, should delight in its exercise; it is often a good device for connecting several pieces in the Service, to repeat the music set to this always recurring doxology; but as the present piece is never sung on the same occasion as the Benedictus, the device has no such application in the instance before us. The music has its merit, the effective amplification of "As it was in the beginning," especially.

The Communion Service opens with an Introit, "Jesus said to His disciples," which pleases us beyond any other portion of the work. It is melodious throughout, and so delicately harmonized as constantly to charm but never startle the ear. A change of measure at the words "I am the head," varies the interest. Supposing this to be performed in the continuation of the Morning Service—as is commonly the case with what the compilers of our Liturgy designed for a separate occasion—there will be a pleasant relief in its being cast in the key of G, from the sound of E flat in which the previous pieces are set.

There are two versions of the Kyrie; one, in case the minister intone the Commandments on the key note of the Introit, begins in C minor; the other, in case he prefer to sing B flat, is in the key of E flat throughout; both are admirable for the purpose. There is music also for the exclamations before and after the Gospel, and for the responses to the minister's exhortation, "Lift up your hearts," the highest praise of which is that it is entirely unobtrusive.

The Credo is a capital piece of music, throughout which every word has its thoughtful treatment. The recurrence of the first phrase, when the declaration of belief precedes a later article, is a point for notice; so too is the mysterious harmony to the word "invisible," and the attributes of the Second Person are powerfully enunciated. The tenor Solo intermixed with chorus, "Who for us men," is a distinct feature, not in this number only, but in the entire work. The separation of the organ-part from those given to the voices, is to produce a twofold effect; not merely to enrich the vocal sound, the repetition of the quavers throws out the sustained note of the singers in prominent relief, and we have thus an appropriation of orchestral use that is fully appropriate to the modern organ and most successfully applied in the movement under notice. The composer's favourite consecution of 7ths, aggravated by false relation, occurs with glaring prominence on the words "the quick and the dead;" we can understand his thirst for extraordinary means to render this truly extraordinary text, but we cannot applaud his choice.

Despite the Rubrick "Then shall the Priest * * * saying one or more of these sentences," our composer has, following the growing custom of the day, set five of the passages that accompany the gathering of the offertory, precluding thus, by the singing of the choir, the "saying" of the minister. Our province is not to dispute the deviation from Prayer Book direction, but to admire the series of musical gems of which the grouping is as meritorious as are the several brief pieces. Their effect is diversified by difference of vocal distribution, and by variety of key, and there can be no question of its unbroken charm.

We have already alluded to the reading adopted for the Sanctus. The idea of mystery, of a sense apart from earthly feelings, is carried we think to its very extreme in the digression into the key of E natural, at "heaven and earth are full," and the sudden return into E flat, at "Glory be to Thee." It is by such extravagant means as this that M. Gounod desecrates the church, carrying not dramatic, but theatrical effects into the temple, and his is an example, in the case in question, that might well be shunned by all writers of worship music. Assuming that extreme transitions may fittingly be used to denote extreme changes of expression, the present must still be out of place, since the purport of the text is unchanged, and, although the modulation be ingenious and imposing, its situation is to be considered, as much as its technical merit.

Another capital piece is the Gloria in excelsis, and a worthy termination to the setting of the entire Office. It is cleverly restrained within desirable conciseness for Anglican use, and yet no point in the text is without musical illustration. Were we to single out passages for praise, this might appear to disparage other portions, so we dismiss it rather with this general commendation.

The already known Service for the evening is not equal in merit to the other two. In the Magnificat, there is a graceful strain at "For His mercy is on them," which would have been more perspicuous had the bars been differently divided, so that the phrase began on the third instead of the first of the bar. In the Nunc dimittis, the same music is set to the Doxology as in the preceding piece, which plan, as these two canticles will mostly be sung on the same occasion, materially affects the impression on the hearers, and so has a different result from the double employment of another setting before noticed.

The composer has a tendency against which we would warn the admirers, who must be very many, of this excellent work. It is to confound the two keys which unfortunately bear the same signature, such as E flat and C minor, by introducing the dominant harmony of the latter in a phrase which is all else in the former key. We have freely stated this and other discrepancies between the author's views and our own, in exception from our general praise of the work, as much to prove the sincerity of this praise as the care with which we have considered the entire production. It argues well for the future of our cathedral music, that a composition needing the nicety in performance which this demands, has acceptance, and we hope it may be succeeded by others of the same order.

"I will mention the loving-kindnesses." Anthem for Easter (tenor solo and chorus). Composed by Arthur Sullivan.

SOME passages from the sixty-third chapter of Isaiah are ingeniously selected, as prophetically referring to the Redeemer, for the text of this Easter Anthem, rather than repeating any of the well-worn passages in the Gospel. The piece opens in G with a rhythmical movement, of which the successive strains are announced by the solo voice and repeated by the full choir, and, after a while, the two are effectively combined. A transitional movement of a declamatory character follows, "So didst Thou lead Thy people," in which the boys' voices and the men's are employed alternately. Lastly, there is a spirited allegro in E, for the entire chorus, "Thou, O Lord, art our Father."

With regard to the letter of the Rev. E. Young, in our present issue, let it be observed that, although the effect may be agreeable of varying the key in the different numbers of a Service, the beginning and ending a single piece in different keys, as in the case before us, is an entirely different matter, and this we are less disposed and indeed less able to advocate. The case is not without precedent, however, as in several operatic instances, and in the overture to Mendelssohn's "Athalia"; so it must remain, for the present, one of taste more than of law, for there is example on one side of the question to balance precept on the other. The close, to us unsatisfactory, in another key from that of the opening, is not the only sign of the anthem having been written in haste—the direct octaves between the outside parts, D G, that introduce the voice, and the harsh progression from augmented 6th to 7th, $\begin{smallmatrix} \#E & \#E \\ G & \#F \end{smallmatrix}$, that occurs twice on page 3, are others—and, with all his experience, and with all his deserved success, even the gifted author of the "Light of the World" should not despise the care that is indispensable to less fortunate writers. These points of objection may be to be found in the music of long established masters, and such music may be cited as precedent; it is to prevent the citation of the present instance as precedent for writers of less repute than Mr. Sullivan, that our objections are stated; a good thing needs no precedent, and every time a questionable one is repeated strengthens the claim to its use by musicians of secondary merit. The work illustrates the tendency of the age to introduce the sentimental harmonies of modern use into music for the Church, a tendency that we are indisposed to support. Granted, that the same privilege should belong to our contemporaries as to their predecessors from generation to generation, of employing the same style in their sacred as in their secular productions; it is yet to be argued that in the manner of treating one class of subjects, such levity is not inappropriate as is incompatible with the other, and such gravity is not indispensable as should be the first essential in what is designed to assist a people's worship. It is because of our author's merited eminence in general esteem, that this protest is offered here, since what is done by a musician of his distinction is liable to be quoted as an authority, and its bearing on the future of the art needs therefore careful consideration.

Short Voluntaries for the Organ, arranged by John Hiles
Vol. 4.

This volume of 180 pages concludes a work of great practical use to church organists. Its contents are selected from the works of J. André, A. W. Bach, J. S. Bach, J. Barnby, E. Batiste, J. Battishill, Beethoven, Sir J. Benedict, A. P. F. Boëly, Oscar Bolck, Carissimi, J. B. Cramer, Dr. Crotch, Dussek, Dr. Garrett, Gluck, Sir J. Goss, Ch. Gounod, Handel, Hasse, Haydn, Dr. H. Hiles, Dr. F. Hiller, E. J. Hopkins, Kalkbrenner, R. Keiser, Max Keller, Koseluch, Lefebure-Wély, Rev. H. F. Limpus, Dr. J. Mendel, Mendelssohn, G. Merkel, Mozart, Rameau, C. Reinthaler, W. Russell, F. Schneider, Schubert, Spohr, Dr. Stainer, A. S. Sullivan, E. H. Thorne, W. Walond, Dr. S. S. Wesley, and, we presume, the editor himself, to whom we ascribe the two Voluntaries which appear anonymously. They consist of German Chorales, English Hymn-tunes, Bourrées, Choruses from oratorios, Songs from operas, movements from symphonies and sonatas, offertories and other pieces. With reference to the word "short" in the title, it is expressly stated that no piece in the collection "is of longer duration than four minutes." To bring them within this limitation, many are considerably compressed; of some, for instance, the opening strain only is given, and the beginning and end of others. Among the more attractive pieces are several from Mr. Barnby's Rebekah, a charming hymn by Mr. E. H. Thorne, some movements by composers whose names are better known than their music, and about whom folks are naturally curious, some compressions from the "Athalia," the "Lauda Sion," "Italian Symphony," the "Christmas Pieces," and the "Songs without words" by Mendelssohn, and two delicious numbers from the "Fair Maid of the Mill" by Schubert. For players who are content to take their meat at another man's carving, this condensing process may be highly serviceable.

The Music composed for Shakspeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream." By F. Mendelssohn Bartholdy.

ALTHOUGH the "Midsummer Night's Dream" can scarcely be separated from the imaginative music with which Mendelssohn has illustrated it by all who have once heard it, the popularity it has hitherto attained in this country is by no means so extensive as it should be. This is owing to two causes. In the first place, not taking its position amongst the "cheap works," in an entire form, amateurs too often content themselves with purchasing detached pieces; and, in the second place, where in schools and private choirs the music has been thought suitable for performance, a question always arises as to the portions of the play which should be read, so as to link the pieces together and preserve the requisite continuity. Both these objections are removed by the publication of the octavo edition now before us; for not only is the whole of the music collected and placed in the right order, but the text of the play which connects the movements is printed precisely as it should be read. By those who prefer the instrumental part for four, instead of two hands, such arrangement can easily be procured; and this edition would then be used exclusively for the vocalists. It would be superfluous to add a word on the excessive beauty of the composition; but we may say that persons who know but little of the music save the Overture and the "Wedding March," will be astonished to find what a mine of wealth this little shilling volume contains.

My Summertime. Ballad. Words by Alfréd E. T. Watson.

The Bells of St. Ethelred. Song. Words by W. Duthie. Composed by J. Barnby.

IN recording our highly favourable opinion upon these two songs, we but endorse the verdict passed upon them by the public at the Royal Albert Hall Concerts, where the first was sung by Mr. Edward Lloyd, and the second by Mr. Whitney. "My Summertime" is a ballad in the truest sense of the word; the melody is extremely vocal, and the harmony obviously written by one who can afford to be simple. The frequent use of lengthened apoggiaturas is a characteristic which cannot fail to strike the hearer, but their introduction is invariably in sympathy with the words to which they are allied. Being published in B flat, as well as in the original key, C, the compass is thoroughly within the reach of amateurs, with whom it is certain to become popular. "The Bells of St. Ethelred" has the real ring of the old English legendary song, the monotony of the tonic and dominant harmonies being in excellent keeping with the opening verses of the quaint little poem, and the change to the major giving a brightness to the concluding portion of the song as unexpected as the change from despair to joyfulness of the heroine, Lady Guinivere. In every respect we are inclined to regard this as one of the best of Mr. Barnby's songs which have yet come before us.

Lullaby. Song. Words by Sir Walter Scott. Composed by C. A. Macirone.

THAT Miss Macirone invariably chooses good poetry for her songs is a proof that she does not regard the words as mere pegs to hang her notes upon, and select—as too many do—a melody from her portfolio which will fit the verses. The musical colouring she has given to Scott's well-known little poem, "O hush thee, my babe," is the evident result of much intelligent thought; and we can safely predict for the song a popularity amongst those amateurs whose taste

THE

POINTED FOR CHANTING

BY

The Rev. S. FLOOD JONES, The Rev. J. TROUTBECK, Dr. STAINER, JAMES TURLE, and J. BARNBY.

PUBLISHED WITH THE SANCTION OF

AND

THE VERY REV. THE DEAN OF WESTMINSTER.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER AND CO., in acknowledging the remarkable favour with which the first issue of this Psalter has been received, beg to announce that they have published an entirely new Edition, in two sizes, with more distinct accents and other signs, the type for which has been cast specially for this work.

Also in compliance with the desire of the Editors, they have adopted an asterisk as a breath mark. The comma will in future only indicate a slight pause without taking breath. This improvement will, they confidently believe, render their Psalter the most valuable means of ensuring good chanting. The difficulty that has hitherto been found in determining where the breath should be taken is well known to Clergy, Choirmasters, and Organists, and the advantage of having this settled on an intelligible basis cannot fail to be appreciated.

A reference to the subjoined examples will more clearly show the advantages of this system:—

I will love thee O Lord my strength * the Lord is my stony rock, and I my defence : my Saviour, my God, and my might, in whom I will trust * my buckler, the horn also of my sal- l -vation I and my I refuge.

For lo, thine enemies O Lord * lo, thine ene- l -mies shall I perish : and all the workers of wicked- l -ness shall I be de- l
stroyed.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER AND CO. have only to add that any inconvenience attendant upon making changes in a book which has already been largely adopted will, they feel confident, be more than counterbalanced by the valuable improvements incorporated in the new Editions.

Edition I., Imperial 32mo., cloth	0	9
" II., ditto, with Proper Psalms, cloth	1	0
" III., Demy octavo, large type, with Proper Psalms, cloth. (In a few days)	2	6

All Editions contain the Canticles, and Special Hymns for use on certain days instead of the Venite.

The Clergy can be supplied with copies, in quantities of not less than 25, on liberal terms.

* * A Selection of Chants (Single and Double), which may be used with or without the Cathedral Psalter, is in preparation.

The Festal and Ferial Responses will shortly be issued by the same Editors.

This Edition has been prepared with considerable pains, all the ancient uses having been carefully examined and collated.

The People's Plain Song will be clearly indicated in a line by itself.

The Offices of the Holy Communion, Baptism, Holy Matrimony, the Burial of the Dead, &c., will be included, thus forming with the Cathedral Psalter a complete Noted Prayer Book.

has been cultivated by art rather than fashion. The melody is exceedingly attractive, the harmonies those of a refined musician, and the figure, obstinately preserved, even in the intervening symphonies, gives much character to the composition. The song was sung by Miss Antoinette Sterling at the Royal Albert Hall Concerts.

The Shipwright. Song. Words by F. E. Weatherley. Composed by J. L. Molloy.

MR. WHITNEY gave the above song at the concerts of the Royal Albert Hall, and with a success which might be anticipated both from the composition and the vocalist. Mr. Molloy always writes catching melodies, and has judgment enough not to distress the voice by over elaborating his accompaniments. "The Shipwright" is a good specimen of his style, and should become a favourite with baritone singers, a class perhaps too much neglected by the composers of the day.

O, Brignall Banks are wild and fair. Song. Words by Sir Walter Scott. Music by J. Knapp.

THE fault of this song is its monotony. The melody is extremely well adapted to the words, and the harmonies are unexceptionable throughout, but the incessant quaver accompaniment becomes tiresome in so long a composition. The plan of harmonising every note is a dangerous one for so simple a song; a few passing notes would be a real relief, both to the vocalist and the listener. The suggestion that the fourth verse should be omitted in performance (which we find at the bottom of page 6) although rather an attempt to cover the defect we complain of, is at least a proof that the author believes with us that such a defect exists.

LAMBORN COCK.

Time and Tune in the Elementary School. A new Method of teaching Vocal Music. By John Hullah.

CONSIDERING that Mr. Hullah adapted Wilhem's Method of teaching Singing for English use in the year 1840, and that since that time he has been incessantly engaged in class teaching, it may fairly be said that he has well earned his right to a patient hearing on the subject, especially when the rage for the "moveable Do" has almost blinded people to the real merits of either the absolute or relative methods of notation. It would be a wonder indeed if so experienced a master as the author of this work were utterly to desert the system by the promulgation of which he gained his fame; but it would be equally a matter of surprise if so intelligent a thinker were to ignore the fact of public opinion on the subject of the fixed Do having in the last few years completely changed. The result is of course a compromise: Mr. Hullah adheres to his former conviction that a note has no right to be called solely according to its place in the scale, but admits that when it is sharpened or flattened, the name should be altered accordingly. As he truly says, the "proposal to modify the sol-fa syllables is, of course, no new thing, either in respect to the moveable or immoveable Do," but their alteration by a rule based on the natural sequence of the vowel sounds, propounded in this work, is, we believe, new; and, supposing such a system to be at all satisfactory, there can be little doubt that this would be the most rational application of it. But the great question is whether the method of teaching students the scale of C until the intervals are firmly fixed in the mind, and then building up other scales in every one of which the relative character of these intervals is changed (involving, of course, the apparent absurdity of sharpening and flattening notes, not to go out of the scale, but to keep in it) will ever permanently obtain. Mr. Hullah says, speaking of the moveable Do, "Now if the note G, on the treble staff, is one minute to be called Sol, another Fa, another Do, and so on throughout the septenary, what chance is there of understanding and remembering the unalterable scientific fact that G has an existence wholly independent of its position as a member of any scale whatsoever?" But this is scarcely worse than placing the first semitone, for instance, between Mi and Fa, on a black board, and afterwards explaining that it will never be found there in any other scale: first impressions are not easily effaced; and that a practical difficulty will not be rendered more agreeable on account of its absolute truth may be sufficiently proved by the almost universal acceptance of the acoustical falsehood "equal temperament." For ourselves, we cannot believe that the relative and absolute systems can ever be properly combined without a new notation; but that letters on a straight line will supply us with all we desire may reasonably be doubted, in spite of the temporary success of such a method.

The Musical Directory, Annual and Almanack, for 1875.

THIS very useful work is now so carefully edited as to deserve the warmest commendation. The list of contents, and Index to the advertisements, will be found to facilitate reference to any part of the book; and a well written article on the musical events of the past year materially adds to its value as a Record, both for professors and amateurs.

DUFF AND STEWART.

Over the Mountain. Ballad. Words from "All the Year Round."

Song with a Burden. Words by Beatrice Abercrombie. Composed by J. L. Hatton.

MR. HATTON'S songs are always acceptable both to a musical and a non-musical audience, for he has the happy faculty not only of writing attractive melodies, but of treating them so artistically as to lift them above the ordinary vocal music of the day. "Over the Mountain" is a good specimen of a musician's ballad, which we need scarcely say is an utterly distinct work from the amateurish productions which have too long been accepted and fostered by those who know no better. The melody is extremely vocal, and the triplet accompaniment flows most sympathetically with the voice-part throughout. In the "Song with a Burden" we have a graceful theme, which well expresses the words; the "Burden"—written for Soprano, Contralto, Tenor and Bass—occasionally stealing in with happy effect, after the principal voice, except at the conclusion of the verse, when it joins it, harmonizing the final phrase. Where any able vocal volunteers can be found in a drawing-room, this composition will be certain to prove highly effective.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BRIXTON CHORAL SOCIETY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Without going into any discussion on my brother's letter to you, I am desirous of assuring you that it was written quite unknown to me, and without consulting me at all on the subject.

Yours very truly,

WILLIAM LEMARE.

THE HARMONY PRIZE OF THE CHURCH CHORAL SOCIETY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Will you permit me a few words in reply to Mr. Iliffe's letter on the subject of the above? It would appear from his letter that graduates in music are debarred from competing for the Harmony Prize. This is not the case. Graduates are not required to take the Harmony papers, but they are at liberty to take all the paper work if they choose, and to compete for any honours or prize open to non-graduate candidates. Had Mr. Iliffe put the question to the examiners or Registrar at the time of examination, he would have received this answer. Mr. Corbett did put the question, and was told that the prize was open to all.

I am empowered to add that if Mr. Iliffe or any other graduate (and nearly all our senior choral fellows are graduates), who may not have been clear on this point, should care to compete for the next Prize, he is at perfect liberty to do so on signifying his intention to the Registrar, Mr. Jennings.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

H. G. BONAVIA HUNT, Warden.

THE WAGNER THEORY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—It is generally observable that the old ladies and the young children—in fact, all those members of every family who are debarred from witnessing the exciting and extraordinary events which happen—are the very ones who have the most to say about them. We, in England, are the corresponding members of the musical family, and while hoping for representations of Richard Wagner's works, which are promised but never given, we faithfully perform the part of the old ladies and young children above mentioned, by indulging in more than our share of talk on the subject. Much of this talk, however, and many tedious arguments, ending in nothing, might have been spared if this new artwork had been pronounced at once what it is, a new art. Thus all those comparisons with other music, which have led to so much confusion and misunderstanding, would have been avoided. This "artwork" or "art," but not "music" of the future is as much poetry as music, and the combination produces something new and distinct from either in its separate form, in the same way as blue and yellow combined produce a new and wholly distinct colour with a character of its own, and not recognisable as a part of either. Each of the arts, as well as each of the colours, has to sacrifice its distinct complexion to make the something new that we so much admire. Green has a real existence—as real as either of the colours of which it is formed: so has the art-work of Wagner, and none the less so because formed of two well-known arts. As there are shades of green according as yellow or blue predominates, so there have always been indistinct approaches to this artwork whenever the two arts have not been kept quite separate; but Wagner has been the first to do consciously what others sometimes did intuitively. This definition shows the fallacy of the objection so often raised, and which sounds at first so plausible, that each of the arts has a separate existence, and all efforts to bring one into the domain of another always have led to the degradation of both, and resulted in partial or utter failure. In proof of this assertion is brought forward Mr. Gibson's attempt to unite sculpture and painting, which, to the artist, led to anything but favourable results. All this, as we have said, sounds at first very convincing, but when we come to reflect, we see that Mr. Gibson's way of setting to work corresponds exactly to the way in which music and poetry are united (?) in the opera as we now have it. The one is music (not music and poetry), the other is sculpture (not sculpture and painting); there is in each case the absolute, unyielding form of the art, and the sister art is only called in to give warmth, colour, and life to that form. Such an unfair partnership, we agree, must result artistically in miserable failure; and the opera, as we now have it, will consequently always hold a secondary place as a work of art, in spite of the delightful strains so often found in it, which we all find pleasure in listening to. Wagner weds the two arts, making each the support essential to the existence of the other. This new artwork is not expected to supersede the opera: this is a notion which has called forth many complaints and given Wagner many enemies. The opera in its present form will continue to hold the place it now does, and Wagner's artwork will no more interfere with its existence than the symphony in its grandest, most sublime power has given the death-blow to the dance tune, from which it sprang.

"Excelsior" is the motto on every artist's banner, and great men always arise when the world is idly sinking into contented repose, vainly dreaming perfection is already attained. They cry, "peace, peace," and even while they are speaking the war-cry "onward" is sounding in the distance: a few—a very few at first—do not resent the call to arouse themselves and gather round the standard, which, to bear triumphantly, they know, if the history of the past teaches anything, they shall have to fight many a hard battle.

VERRING.

NATIONAL MUSIC MEETINGS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—As there seems to be some misapprehension with reference to the National Music Meetings taking place this year, I shall be obliged if you will allow me thus to inform the musical public that the Third Series of Competitive Performances between Choral Societies, Solo Singers, and Military Bands, will be held at the Crystal Palace, on the 1st, 2nd, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 10th of July next; that Authorised Editions of the Music to be prepared for performance are published by Messrs. Novello and Co., and Messrs. Metzler and Co.; and that Rules, and Forms of Entry, and all other particulars can be obtained on application at my office, or by letter addressed to Mr. Willert Beale, at the Crystal Palace.

I remain,

Your obedient servant,

S. FLOOD PAGE, Secretary.

Crystal Palace, S.E., 21st January, 1875.

DIVERSITY OF KEY IN THE CHURCH SERVICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I have been guilty of an innocent act, and am threatened with the crown of martyrdom in consequence. Can you find me an explanatory corner in your valued columns?

The documentary facts are in a nutshell. You, sir, in a pleasant notice of my Morning Service, observe, "The author opens a novel question . . . the necessity, or even desirability, for all the pieces of a Service to be in one and the same key . . . illustrated in the music under notice, where the first piece is in E flat, the second in A, and the last in E." Again, in a congenial notice of my Evening Service, you say, "The principle enunciated in what we may regard as the earlier portion of the work is here abrogated." And now, in a review of Mr. Barnby's elaborate Service, you say, "This principle of diversifying the tonality in the numbers of a Service, is proposed by the Rev. Edward Young in a Preface . . . and it is well worthy the earnest thought of musicians." On the other hand, we read in another journal that shall be nameless, "With some reason the composer explains that he did not choose to follow the old plan of writing his whole Service in the same key. Now, without saying, &c., it does appear to us wise to set the different movements in keys having some relationship." Another journal, which for like reason I also refrain from naming, tells us flatly, "The Rev. Edward Young's Morning Service is not altogether a musical satisfaction, inasmuch as the composer does not succeed in his attempt to neglect the rules of art, and so justify his Preface, which has eloquent thoughts. . . . Such a change of tonality, even with the intervening lesson, is neither pleasant, nor likely to secure, at least from non-professional singers, a just intonation." And this, sir, is all a professional critic can say of notes that have thrilled hearts and moistened eyes of gentle and simple, and are congregationally sung—I had almost said, to the ends of the world!

But so—the subject is fairly broached—I am fairly in for a share in it; I may fairly ask leave for an opening word regarding it. I shall content myself with a brace of questions. Ere, however, the scene widens, and I have "greatness thrust upon me," I must whisper—in an "aside"—a little statement of facts.

This diversity of key was not assumed for the assertion of an abstract principle. In nine successive issues the Venite and Te Deum were in three, and the Jubilate in two flats; the Kyrie having been subsequently added. It happened that, without my cognizance, a copy was shewn to—perhaps I may say—the first Church musician amongst us; and that eminent man was not only good enough to propose the adoption of the Service in his own Cathedral, but to suggest my putting it forth in a more condensed, or, as he expressed it, a less "orchestral" form, "for general use in our Cathedrals and choirs." The work of revision once started, I took count of an objection sometimes made to the pitch of the opening treble note (F) in the Jubilate, and, for congregational convenience, lowered the piece a semitone. But then, methought, there is old Red-tape in the back ground! so I made formal protest, in self defence, but with my foot on a great principle, against crotchets.

I come now to my pair of questions: one, of course, musical; but the first, theological. This, Sir, is Church business. The Church is a "house of prayer," and not a concert room; and I a clergyman of some six and forty years standing. I ask then, first, what key relationship is there—theologically speaking—between the Venite, Te Deum, and Jubilate, or Benedictus? What between these and the first and second Lesson? What between the chanted Psalms amongst themselves (1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 to wit)? What between the metrical Psalms or Hymns? Who gave musicians the right to exact noted coherences where there is an absolute incoherence in all, to which Church music should be subordinate? Why should the devotional spirit have eagle's wings, and its musical utterance be tied and bound by cold pedantic empiricisms? Yes, and why—to quote my own poor words—should one be called to forget a golden rule I am never tired of repeating, "Word and note like husband and wife?" As for "non-professional singers" and "just intonation," one might ask how long shall music be tolerated in the worship of the sanctuary, if men are to hold the sense of a key note through all the absorbing beauties and commanding wonders of a lesson from the Word of God?

But I must come closer yet, and ask, secondly, where do we find this ignoble slavery to tonic formalism in the unapproachable work of "the mighty master" who stands alone? Where in No. 4 ending in A, and No. 5 opening in D minor? Where in No. 6 ending in D minor, and No. 7 opening in G minor? Where in No. 8 ending in A, and No. 9 opening in D? Where in No. 11 ending in B minor, and No. 12 opening in G? Where in No. 29 ending in B major, and No. 30 opening in E minor? Or, to cite but one more case, wherein No. 32 ending again in three sharps, and 33 opening in one flat?

There can be but one answer to all these queries; and there is no escape from their inferences. To say that an Oratorio demanded changes were but attempting to avoid the mark. The one undisguisable ruling point is that, between these immortal pieces there is not the slightest figment or key relationship, and this ruling point is the more pointed from the fact that these absolutely unconnected outbursts of religion and musical fervour have absolutely no intervening medium, no second lesson, no hymn, no prayer standing between them, nothing but the needful pause of singer and hearer to take breath and begin again.

There are other questions of no small moment that, in these days of advancing freedom, will rise up, and demand an answer. One is before me now: but I forbear. I only want that common-sense and high-toned feeling should wake up and look about them.

Yours, Sir, with all respect,
EDWARD YOUNG.

[We agree fully in the principle here enunciated, and, though contrary to more general practice, can feel no reason for identity of key in the separated pieces of a Church Service, far less in those of the Morning and Evening Services. In Beethoven's Mass in C, the Sanctus is in A; and in his Mass in D, the Credo is in B flat; and what holds good in the Roman Service cannot be musically at fault in the Anglican, while what has the authority of this mighty master must hold good everywhere. The instances quoted by Mr. Young (of course from the Messiah) are all in such closely-related keys that the transition from any one piece to that which follows it has a perfectly satisfactory effect, and induces an agreeable variety; those quoted from Beethoven are in analogous but less closely related keys than Handel's, and being divided from the other portions of the composition by intervening matter with or without music, startle not by their diversity, though they charmingly relieve the monotony, that is to some extent a consequence of a whole Service having one chiefly prevailing key. We only contend, but this more for the sake of conscience than of effect, that it is preferable for the several numbers of one composition to have some tonal affinity, to their being in various keys that have either the remotest relationship or no relationship at all. The nicest of ears are unshocked by the tonal diversity of the several pieces in an opera which are separated by speaking; where separated by recitative, the modulations in this lead satisfactorily from the key of one piece to that of another, which is not always the case with the chanting and intoning in a Service; and what is musically agreeable in a theatre cannot be offensive in a Church.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

ASHTON-UPON-MERSEY, NEAR MANCHESTER.—On the 20th ult. a concert was given in aid of the parochial school funds. The choruses, on the whole, were well rendered. The vocalists were Miss Topcliffe, Mr. N. Dumville (of Manchester Cathedral), and Mr. Smith. Mrs. Ellis contributed pianoforte solos.

BATH.—Mr. Simms's concert took place on Saturday evening the 9th ult., in the Assembly Rooms. The programme was an attractive one, consisting almost entirely of operatic music, the first part being devoted exclusively to Balfe's Il Talismano. The rose song, "Floweret, I kiss thee," was artistically given by Signor Uriò, and Madame Campobello-Sinico was warmly received in the two arias, "Edith's prayer" and "Radiant splendour." Madame Stella-Bonheur and Signor Campobello were the other vocalists. Signor Tito Mattel gave as a pianoforte solo a fantasia, of his own arrangement, on the English and Russian National Anthems. Signor Campana was an excellent accompanist.

BATLEY.—The twenty-second concert of the Choral Society was given in the Town Hall on Monday evening the 11th ult., the work being Haydn's Creation. The vocalists were Miss Clelland (soprano), Mr. H. Thompson (tenor), and Mr. Rickard (bass). Miss Clelland sang with good taste and expression, and was warmly applauded at the conclusion of the airs "With verdure clad" and "On mighty pens." Mr. H. Thompson, in the recit. "And God created man," and air "In native worth," gave proof of the possession of a fair voice, the upper notes being particularly good. Mr. Rickard sang the bass part exceedingly well; he has a powerful voice, of good compass. Herr Vetter led the band, and Mr. J. W. Bowling conducted. The chorus, (which was augmented by members of the Harmonic Society, Morley) under the conductorship of Mr. Bowling, was full and effective. A word of praise is due to Mr. C. Shaw (violinello), whose accompaniment to the recitatives and airs (especially "In native worth") was excellent.

CAPE TOWN.—The Cantata of Esther, the Beautiful Queen, was given on Wednesday evening the 9th Dec. by the Sacred Harmonic Society in the Mutual Hall, under the patronage of His Excellency the Governor. Mr. Ashley conducted with his usual ability, and the effects of his careful training were very evident in the choruses, which were sung throughout with a painstaking care and due appreciation of the composer's intentions, which as welcome as they are rare among amateur vocalists. The part of Esther was exceedingly well sung.

CRAWLEY.—Concerts, both morning and evening, were given at the Assembly Room of the George Hotel on Wednesday the 30th Dec. to very appreciative audiences. The artists were Madame Cassinello, Madlle. Teresa Bonini, Madlle. F. Pieczonka (daughter and pupil of Herr Pieczonka), Mons. Bataille, and Mr. H. Arthur. The performances of Madlle. F. Pieczonka on the piano gave unbounded satisfaction. Madlle. Bonini was several times encored, her songs, with harp accompaniments, being highly appreciated, and several of Madame Cassinello's vocal solos were also re-demanded. The song "Hearts of oak," was well rendered by Mons. Bataille. The concert was very successful.

DERRY.—The second concert of the winter season, 1874-75, was given in the Corporation Hall on Friday evening the 15th ult. by the St. Columb's Union, under the able management of Mr. James Turpin, organist of St. Columb's Cathedral. The Rev. James Armstrong presided at the harmonium, in addition to which several stringed-instrument players were specially engaged for the occasion from Belfast. The first part of the programme was exclusively devoted to the performance of a portion of Handel's Messiah. The tenor part was well sustained by Mr. H. A. Byron; the bass by the Rev. Mr. Hogan; alto by Mrs. James P. Allen and Miss Forsman; and soprano by Miss Plummer. The second part of the concert was composed of hymns and part-songs.

DORCHESTER.—The Vocal Association gave a performance of the first part of Elijah on the 23rd Dec. The solo vocalists were Miss Matilda Scott (soprano), Miss Margaret Hancock (contralto), Mr. Wallace Wells (tenor), and Mr. J. Lander (bass); hon. accompanists, Miss M. Wills Lock and Mr. W. Gregory, pupils of Mr. Boyton Smith. The parts were most evenly balanced, and the whole of the choruses went exceedingly well. Mr. Boyton Smith conducted.

EDINBURGH.—The fifth of the series of concerts now being given by the Choral Union took place on the 4th ult. in the Music Hall, and attracted a larger audience than any of its predecessors. There was a band of fifty performers, conducted by Mr. Adam Hamilton, with Miss Agnes Drechsler-Hamilton for solo violinist, and Madame Campobello-Sinico for solo vocalist. The programme was well selected. Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's charming overture, "The Naiades," and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, were done full justice to by the band. Miss Agnes Hamilton was highly effective in her violin solo "Airs Hongrois" (Ernst), and Madame Campobello-Sinico had an extremely cordial greeting on her entry, and her rendering of Beethoven's highly dramatic scena "Ah, perido," and some lighter songs, gave the highest satisfaction to the audience.—PROFESSOR OAKELEY gave an Organ Recital on the 14th ult. to a crowded audience in the Music Class-room. The attendance of students especially was very large. Loud applause followed the performance of each number, and several pieces were redemanded, but Dr. Oakeley responded in only one instance by repeating Handel's Gavotte.

GOLCAR.—On Thursday evening, Dec. 24, the Choral Society, assisted by members of the Huddersfield Choral Society, gave a concert, consisting of a selection from Handel's Messiah. The principal artists were Mrs. Barras, Messrs. Townsend, Lunn, and Stocks. Mr. J. E. Pearson presided at the harmonium, and Mr. H. Pearson conducted. The performance on the whole was satisfactory.

HULL.—Miss Bolingbroke's third annual concert took place in the Artillery Barracks on the 20th ult. The artists were, in addition to the concert giver, Miss Jessie Jones, Miss Ann Dooly, Mr. Henry Guy, Mr. Arthur Jarratt, Mr. F. C. Bolingbroke (flute), and Mr. J. W. Hudson (violin). The various pieces in the programme were well received by a large audience, and the concert was a decided success.

LEEDS.—On the 15th ult. Mr. J. W. Sykes, R.A.M., gave his second violin Recital in the large hall of the Leeds Church Institute, before an appreciative audience. Mr. Sykes's performance of solos by De Beriot, Tartini, Spohr, Ernst, and Sainton was highly effective. Miss Tomlinson was the vocalist, and Mr. C. W. Young accompanied.

LEICESTER.—A very successful concert was given by Mr. Nicholson on the 18th ult. The vocalists were Madame Thaddeus Wells, Madame Poole, Mr. Lloyd (in place of Mr. Sims Reeves), and Mr. Santley. Mr. Lloyd delighted his audience by his artistic rendering of "The Garland" (Mendelssohn). Mr. Val. Nicholson contributed solos on the violin, and the band and chorus of the Amateur Anemoic Union gave efficient aid. Mr. Sidney Naylor presided at the pianoforte.

LIVERPOOL.—The second Soirée of the season, under the auspices of the Jewish Choral Society, took place on New Year's Eve, in the Meyerbeer-hall, and proved, like all its predecessors, a very enjoyable re-union. Amongst the principal items of the musical portion of the entertainment were a duo concertante (violin and pianoforte), excellently played by Mr. James J. Monk and Mr. Emmanuel Nelson, the honorary conductor; a pianoforte solo, the composition of Mr. Monk; an aria of Donizetti, by Mrs. E. Nelson; and several concerted pieces, which were admirably rendered by the Jewish Choral Society. A new four-part song, entitled "I met my love," composed by Mr. Monk, was also sung with success.—The first performance of the present series of concerts, on the plan of the London Monday Popular Concerts, which was given in the Philharmonic Hall on Wednesday the 6th ult., was, as usual, most admirable, and highly appreciated. The executants were, first violin, Mons. Sainton; second violin, Herr L. Ries; viola, Mr. Zerbin; violoncello, Signor Piatti; solo pianoforte, Miss Agnes Zimmermann; vocalist, Mr. Santley; accompanist, Mr. Zerbin.

The programme comprised the quartett in E flat major, Op. 44, No. 3, for two violins, viola, and violoncello (Mendelssohn); song, "Tre giorni son che Nina" (Pergolesi); Sonata pianoforte in C major, Op. 2, No. 3 (Beethoven); songs, "Dein Angesicht" and "Widmung" (Schumann); two "Stücke im Volkston," from "Fünf Stücke im Volkston" (Schumann); song, "I pray thee by the gods above" (Alwyn); and the trio in C minor, Op. 66, No. 2, pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Mendelssohn).

MANCHESTER.—On the 28th December the Shelley and Old Glossop hand-bell ringers contested at Belle Vue Gardens for the championship of England, and a prize of £50 offered by Messrs. Jennison. The Shelley band numbers, including the conductor, eight ringers, the Old Glossop twelve, though the former rings quite as many bells as the latter. The Glossop ringers' selection comprised the Kyrie and Gloria (Mozart), Haydn's No. 1 Symphony, and a Rondo Brillante. Their opponents also played Haydn's First Symphony and Haydn's D Symphony, and the overture to Zanetta. The judges were Mr. C. Warwick Jordan, Mus. Bac., Lewisham, Kent; Mr. L. Goodwin, organist, Church of the Holy Name, Manchester; and Mr. W. J. Young, professor of music, Manchester. These gentlemen decided, after a contest lasting two hours, that the prize should be awarded to the Shelley ringers, though they expressed their opinion that the arrangement and execution by the Old Glossop band of Haydn's First Symphony were superior to those of the other band.

MARKET HARBOUR.—Handel's Messiah was given on Monday evening, the 4th ult., by the Choral Society, to a large audience. The performance was exceedingly creditable throughout, some of the choruses being magnificently rendered. Mr. Frederick Illife, Mus. Bac., organist of Kibworth Church, conducted. At the next concert Handel's Acis and Galatea will be given, and selections from Haydn's Creation.

MARKET LAVINGTON.—An amateur concert was given in the Workmen's Hall, in aid of the national schools, on Thursday evening the 31st Dec., under the immediate patronage of the Right Hon. E. P. and Mrs. Bouverie, and the Hon. Mrs. Hay, all of whom were present at the concert. The principal performers were Miss M. Welch, Mrs. Stone, Mrs. Hulbert, Miss Pearson, Miss Wadman, the Rev. H. C. de St. Croix, Mr. John Gray, and Mr. Barth, pianist. Encores were awarded to Miss M. Welch, who has a good contralto voice, and to Mr. Barth for his pianoforte solo. A choir of about thirty members sang several part-songs very excellently, many of which were encored. At the conclusion of the concert the Hon. Mr. Bouverie rose and proposed a vote of thanks to the performers.

MARYPORT, CUMBERLAND.—The members of the recently formed Philharmonic Society gave their first concert on the 6th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. C. J. Lewthwaite, of Cockermouth. The programme consisted of sacred and secular selections from Mozart, Rossini, Sullivan, Lord Mornington, Sir J. Stevenson, Hatton, and others. The concerted music was exceedingly well rendered. Mrs. Holliday, Miss Curwen, Miss Richardson, and Mr. Wharton contributed songs and duets, many of which were encored. The surplus of the concert was given to the Charity Fund. Peter de E. Collin, Esq., was chairman, and Miss E. Adair presided at the piano.

NORTHAMPTON.—Handel's Messiah was performed by the Choral Society on Thursday the 7th ult. The choir, consisting of upwards of 150 performers, gave an excellent rendering of the choruses. The band had been strongly reinforced, and was in every respect thoroughly efficient. The Rev. C. J. Langley presided at the organ with ability and judgment. The principal vocalists were Miss Ellen Glanville (soprano), Miss Joyce Maas (contralto), Mr. Frank Reade (tenor), and Mr. Orlando Christian (bass). Miss Glanville in "I know that my Redeemer liveth" sang with care, finish, and appreciation, which gained for her well-merited applause. Miss Joyce Maas was encored in "He shall feed His flock," Mr. Frank Reade sang very carefully the parts allotted him, and Mr. Christian was highly effective in "The trumpet shall sound," the trumpet obbligato by Mr. Walter Morrow being splendidly played. Mr. Charles McKorkell conducted.

PAULTON, BRISTOL.—A concert was given on the 28th Dec. under the direction of Mr. T. West. The solos by the Misses Hill and A. Milward, Messrs. Shore, Ings, Lovell, and Watts, were very well sung and the choruses were rendered with precision. Miss Milward, accompanied throughout with her usual ability. The concert was highly successful.

PARSONSTOWN, IRELAND.—An amateur concert was given on Tuesday morning the 5th ult., at the residence of Mrs. Atkinson, of Cango, in aid of the new schools, Shinrone. The first part of the programme was devoted to Mendelssohn's Athalie, which was very effectively rendered, the "War March" being played as a pianoforte duet by the Countess of Rosse and Miss Trench, with violin obbligato (Mr. Arnold). The second part consisted of instrumental and vocal solos. Amongst those who took part were Miss and Mrs. Croft, R. Biggs, Esq., LL.D., and H. Thompson, Esq., J.P. Mr. Arnold, presided at the piano. The performance was a great success, and the audience large and influential.

READING.—The Promenade Concerts under the management of Mr. Frank Attwells, if not successful in a financial sense, are carried out strictly to promise, and with a success, musically, that will doubtless be of benefit to the enterprising caterer for the amusement of the public, upon future occasions. Many well-known artists have appeared, including Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Jessie Royd, Miss Dones, Miss Helen Standish, Mr. Stedman, Signor Corani, Mr. Thurely Beale, Mr. Wadmore, Signor Enrico Mattei, Mr. Henry Parker, and Herr Wiener.

ROTHERHAM.—On Tuesday, the 10th inst., a Lecture-Concert was given by Dr. Spark, of Leeds, before a numerous audience, in the Mechanics' Hall, Rotherham, on "The Vocal Gems of English Opera." The lecturer gave an interesting review of modern opera in England, down to the present time, and selections from the writings of Purcell, Welsh, Arne, Shield, Braham, Bishop, Horn, Balfe, and Wallace, were admirably sung by Miss Carey Walker, Miss Jenny Taylor (both pupils of Dr. Spark), Mr. Edward Kemp (tenor), and Mr. Dodds (bass).

SHEFFIELD.—On Christmas day and the 2nd ult. the Messiah was performed in the Albert Hall to a crowded audience. Miss Rose Hersee, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. Guy, and Mr. Brandon were the solo singers at the first performance, supported by a band and chorus of 200 performers, and Miss Crichton, Miss Clelland, Mr. Sutcliffe, and Mr. Thornton Wood, with the same band and chorus, were the vocalists in the latter instance. Mr. S. Hadfield conducted on each occasion. On the 16th ult. a military concert and organ Recital drew a large audience, Miss A. Bloomfield and Mr. J. H. Eyre being the vocalists, and the band of the 1st W. Y. Yeomanry Cavalry, of which Mr. S. Suckley is the bandmaster, occupied the orchestra. The playing of the band was of a very efficient character, and reflected the highest credit on the bandmaster, who officiated as conductor. Mr. F. Archer, organist of the Alexandra Palace, presided at the organ. On the 18th ult. the Albert Hall was again crowded to hear an excellent performance of the Creation. The band, which was a string one, was thoroughly efficient, under the leadership of Mr. John Peck, Mons. Guilment on the organ atoning for the absence of wind instruments. The solo vocalists were Miss Helena Walker, Mr. Bywater, and Mr. Brandon. Mr. Hadfield was again the conductor. Mons. Guilment has given several organ recitals, which were conducted with his usual skill and ability.

SHREWSBURY.—On Tuesday evening the 19th ult. Mr. Boucher's fourth subscription concert of classical chamber music was given in the Assembly Room at the Lion Hotel, to a select and fashionable audience. The artists were Miss Watkis (vocalist), Mr. J. H. Thomas, Mr. W. Cover, R.A.M. (violinists), Mr. T. Watkis (viola), Mr. J. B. Boucher (violinello), and Herr John Weingaertner (pianist). Miss Watkis gave a clever rendering of two songs, the latter one, "The green trees whispered" (Balfé) eliciting an encore. Mozart's duet for violin and pianoforte, in D minor, was played with great taste and correctness by Mr. Cover and Herr Weingaertner, and the same composer's quartett in B flat major was also admirably rendered. The programme was brought to a termination by a very clever performance of Beethoven's quartett in E flat major, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello.

SOUTHPORT.—On Friday evening the 15th ult. M. Alexandre Guilment, the celebrated organist of the Church of La Trinité, Paris, gave a Recital on the grand organ in St. Peter's Church. The large audience, which included organists and organ connoisseurs from all parts, testified the interest excited by the visit of a man whose compositions Mr. Best some years ago was the means of introducing into this country. The programme was well selected, but the majority of the pieces were by M. Guilment, a circumstance which enhanced the interest of the Recital, as it was natural that organists would be anxious to avail themselves of the opportunity of hearing these works interpreted by the composer.

STAMFORD.—On the 29th December Mr. Harry Nicholson gave an amateur evening concert in the Assembly Rooms. The first part consisted entirely of selections from the Messiah, and the second part of ancient and modern Carols, which were well rendered. The performance was very successful. Mr. H. Nicholson presided at the pianoforte.

ULEY, GLOUCESTERSHIRE.—The first concert of the Glee Society took place on Wednesday the 30th Dec. in the National School-room. The Merry Men of Sherwood Forest, an Operetta, by W. H. Birch, had the place of honour in the programme, and was exceedingly well rendered. Mrs. Hudson presided at the piano with great efficiency. The local performers were assisted by Miss Wilson, of the Gloucester Choral Society, and Messrs. Hunt and Waddams, of the Cathedral choir, who also contributed some songs. The choruses generally were well rendered, and showed that Mr. Leach, the organist of the church, has devoted considerable time and labour to the training of the choir. A prologue and an epilogue, à propos to the occasion, written by a lady in the village, were exceedingly well recited by the Rev. J. C. Hudson.

WELLINGTON.—An amateur concert was given at the Town Hall on the 29th December, on behalf of the Wellington and Rockwell Green Girls' and Infant Schools. A well selected programme was excellently performed, a great feature being the partsinging. A Christmas chorus, "Up, brothers, up," (Calkin) "O hush thee, my babe" (Sullivan), and a charming chorus with solo, "We'll gaily sing and play" (Pinsuti), creating much effect. The instrumentalists mustered in good numbers, and included two professional gentlemen: Mr. Richardson, of Bristol (violinist), and Mr. Cheek of Taunton (flautist).

WHITCHURCH.—On Wednesday evening the 6th ult. a pianoforte and violin Recital was given at Apsley House (by the kind permission of Mrs. Steer), in aid of the Whitchurch school fund. The artists were Mrs. Squire (pianoforte), Mr. Squire (violin), and Miss Seymour (vocalist). The programme comprised music of the highest class, including works of Beethoven, Mozart, and Mendelssohn, all of which were well rendered. There was a large attendance.

WINDSOR.—A musical entertainment illustrative of John Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress was given in the Iver Church School-room on the 19th ult. for the benefit of the Sunday schools, by the Colnbrook Choral Class, numbering forty voices, under the conductorship of Mr. R. Ratcliff. The Rev. S. Ward, the vicar, presided, and the Rev. Mr. Oliver gave the readings. Miss Saunders accompanied on the harmonium.

WORKINGHAM.—Mr. T. S. Brown's annual concert took place in the Town Hall, on Monday evening the 4th ult. The artists were Madame Thaddeus Wells, soprano and pianist; Mr. Henry Nicholson, solo flute; and a Glee Party, under the direction of Mr. Farley Sinkins, of Oxford. Madame Wells gave an excellent rendering of Bishop's "Lo! here the gentle lark," with flute accompaniment, by Mr. Nicholson, who was encored in his solo, "Rule Britannia." The part music was well sung by Messrs. Bickley, Thornton, Robson, and Sinkins, who were also highly successful in their songs. There was a large audience.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. J. J. Wilson to Holy Trinity Church, Southall. Mr. W. H. Skelton to the Wesleyan Chapel, Mytholmroyd, Yorkshire. Mr. H. V. Lewis, organist and choirmaster, St. James', Bermondsey. Mr. G. H. Starmer to Old Hollington Church, Sussex.

CHOIR APPOINTMENT.—Mr. W. Keedle (Bass), to St. George's Chapel, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly.

ON the 12th November, at sea, while on passage to Cape Town for the benefit of his health, FREDERICK R. FOLKES, of the Royal Academy of Music, London. He died after a painful and lingering illness, leaving a wife and six young children to mourn his loss.

Anthem for Easter, composed by CHARLES JOSEPH FROST. Price 3d. London: Novello, Ewer and Co.

From the Musical Times, Oct., 1873.

"They who entertain the opinion that the Church is not an arena for the display of solo singing, will welcome a choral anthem for one of the festive occasions which abounds in musical interest and vocal effect. Being in the key of E it has good effect of contrast from the digression into G natural for an episode, to the words 'Even so we also should walk in newness of life,' and the return theme to the original E makes an equally pleasant tonal variety on the resumption of the opening theme. We have had frequent occasion to commend Mr. C. J. Frost's compositions, and we look forward to his taking higher ground as a writer than he has yet essayed, and maintaining it to his own honour and the enrichment of music."
